

400 top restaurants
Affordable meals with a restaurant to suit every taste. Details and voucher
PAGE 7

Cool for kids
Young ideas for spring
PAGE 16

Reith lectures
A living language must break the rules
PAGE 9

Let's hear it for the middle classes
Why we should back suburban values, P17

Peers' revolt wins TV sports victory

By ARTHUR LEATHLEY
ALEXANDRA FREAN
AND ALICE THOMSON

BROADCASTING of top sporting events on BBC and ITV was guaranteed last night after the Lords defeated the Government in a campaign to prevent them going exclusively to satellite television.

World Cup finals; the FA Cup final; the Scottish FA Cup final; Wimbledon finals weekend; and the Olympics.

The Lords ignored appeals from Virginia Bottomley, the National Heritage Secretary, to wait for the results of consultation, and instead delivered one of the biggest government defeats in the Upper House in recent years. Ministers conceded that there was no chance of the amendment to the Broadcasting Bill being overturned in the Commons, but they claimed that the Government was relaxed about it.

International, owner of The Times. BSkyB failed last month in its attempt to buy the rights to the Olympic Games up to 2008, but it has expressed no interest in bidding for exclusive rights to any of the domestic events.

Both the BBC and BSkyB welcomed the vote. A BBC spokesman said: "The Lords decision is a welcome endorsement of the widely-held public view that these great national occasions should be available for all to see."

John Bridgeman, the director general of Fair Trading, decided to refer a £304 million five-year agreement, the biggest in British sports history, and a subsidiary one, in which the league agreed to award the rights for a further five years to the two companies, if either matched any other broadcaster's offer.

They can't just charge on as if nothing has happened. However, ministers admitted that they expected a backlash from some big sports bodies which have campaigned to be allowed to conduct their own negotiations with broadcasters without being constrained by legislation. Some senior sports executives are likely to protest that a decision has effectively been taken before the three-week consultation process is complete.

Debate, page 10
New channels, page 27

Exit Sid with gas split-up; exit Cedric on £367,000 a year

By ROSS TIEMAN AND PHILIP WEBSTER

SID, the archetypal small shareholder eagerly pursued when British Gas was privatised ten years ago, is being told that he is not wanted any more now that the company is to be split up.

Such investors are to be encouraged to cash in their shares because the chairman, Richard Giordano, says it would be "inappropriate" for the new supply company, British Gas Energy, to have a register of 1.8 million names.

The rebuff came as Mr Giordano outlined his plans for the division of British Gas - and immediately plunged the company into a new controversy over its chief executive's pay.

Cedric Brown, whose 71 per cent pay rise in 1994 sparked the "fat cats" row about boardroom greed, is to retire in April with an annual pension of £247,000, a chauffeur-driven Jaguar, a secretary and a £120,000-a-year consultancy contract.

The deal prompted rowdy exchanges in the Commons yesterday. The Prime Minister insisted that the package was a matter for shareholders, but Tony Blair challenged him to say whether he thought it justified, given the doubling of customer complaints and the division of the company because of potential losses.

He contrasted British Gas's action with Michael Heseltine's remarks apparently condoning the late payment of bills to business creditors as "one group of hard-working people told to wait for their money, the other given licence by the Government to print it."

Away from the Commons, Mr Brown was having a difficult confrontation with journalists who demanded to know whether he was being pushed out. He insisted: "It is my decision to retire," adding: "I believe that to a very large extent, the task I set myself has been completed."

However, he admitted that it had not been pleasant over the past 15 months, since his pay rise was announced in the middle of a massive job-shedding programme.

MUCH of Britain was paralysed yesterday by some of the heaviest snowfalls for 50 years, with motorists stranded for a second night in their cars, hundreds of schools shut and thousands of homes without power.

A state of emergency was declared in Dumfries and Galloway, in the Borders, where 24 inches of snow fell in 36 hours. The council co-ordinated emergency services

A lonely snowplough struggles to clear the A66 trans-Pennine road yesterday. The AA said of conditions in Cumbria and the Borders: "There are more roads closed than open"

Hundreds of drivers stranded in snow chaos

By RUSSELL JENKINS
AND STEPHEN FARRELL

MUCH of Britain was paralysed yesterday by some of the heaviest snowfalls for 50 years, with motorists stranded for a second night in their cars, hundreds of schools shut and thousands of homes without power.

A state of emergency was declared in Dumfries and Galloway, in the Borders, where 24 inches of snow fell in 36 hours. The council co-ordinated emergency services from an underground nuclear bunker. Territorial Army officers boosted the rescue services trying to reach motorists stranded overnight. About 1,000 motorists were trapped in their cars in Dumfries.

A man whose daughter was stranded in her car near Lockerbie became so desperate that he tried to hire an RAF Sea King helicopter using his American Express platinum card. The company, which boasts a personal service to platinum holders, tried to rent a private helicopter from Glasgow Airport at 2am. When none was available, it tried to hire a Sea King, which costs £5,000 an hour, from RAF stations at Lossiemouth, Boulmer and Kinloss.

It was told that the RAF does not send out its rescue helicopters except at the request of the police. "To the best of our knowledge this is the first time anybody has tried to hire us with a credit card," an RAF rescue co-ordination centre official said. "It would have been nice if we had been able to say 'That will do nicely' and rent

Riot warning

There could be riots in the streets if the welfare budget were cut overnight, Kenneth Clarke warned Tory right-wingers, as he mapped out a gradual path to reducing state spending. He quoted the recent disruption in France as a warning. Page 2

New test plans

Gillian Shepherd, the Education and Employment Secretary, is asking her curriculum advisers to consider introducing formal tests for nine-year-olds in an effort to counter widespread alarm about primary school standards. Page 5

Jury dodging 'must stop'

By JILL SHERMAN, POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

MEMBERS of the professions will no longer be able to evade jury service under Labour plans to ensure that fewer criminals are let off.

Jack Straw, Shadow Home Secretary, intends to stop people avoiding jury service by citing business commitments, holidays or minor illness. The automatic exemption of some professions - including MPs, peers, doctors, dentists, nurses, vets and chemists and anyone in the armed forces - will also be reviewed. He believes that juries - which are supposed to be selected at random - no longer reflect the community and are "skewed" towards the working class and the unemployed who are often unsympathetic to the police and more likely to acquit criminals.

Mr Straw points out that under present "loose practice", professional people can avoid being jurors, particularly for long trials, by arguing that they cannot take time off work.

Business commitments and holidays are listed as reasons for exemption, as well as illness and physical disability. He unveiled new figures disclosing that in some courts more than one-third of people asked to serve on juries avoided service.

Olympic hopeful breaks legs in car crash

By CRAIG LORD
SWIMMING CORRESPONDENT

THE Olympic dreams of one of Britain's brightest young swimmers have been shattered by a head-on car crash in which she broke both legs.

Alex Bennett, who will be 19 in two weeks, was injured on her way to a training session on Monday. She underwent ten hours of surgery at the Queen's Medical Centre in Nottingham and will be unable to compete at the British Olympic trials to be held at Sheffield next month.

The Commonwealth gold medalist had postponed going to university as she concentrated on preparing for the Atlanta Olympics in July. She had been training for 20 hours a week and was driving to one of her regular evening sessions at Bechdale Baths in Nottingham when the accident happened on the A612 between Thurgarton and Lowdham in Nottinghamshire.

She awoke yesterday to the news from her parents, Roger and Chris, that she has metal pins and plates in both legs, one hip, one foot and one ankle. One of her kneecaps was also reconstructed and she suffered cuts to her face. Although still breathing oxygen through a mask, she joked that they should tell her coach, Bill Furniss, "that I'll be a bit rusty when I come back".

Her mother said yesterday: "She's alive and that's lucky, that's what counts. They did all the surgery in one go and Alex has been awake quite a lot but I don't think she quite realises yet just how long a recovery she's in for."

Mr Furniss said last night that she was the "kind of girl who will be back in six months, where it would take others a year".

Bennett underwent all surgery in one go

MODULAR BUILDINGS

Quality refurbished buildings redesigned to suit your needs
at a fraction of the price of new ideal for Offices, Classrooms,
& Nursery Schools

Phone or fax now for an immediate quotation

GLOBAL MOBILE

01580 212212

TV & RADIO46, 47
WEATHER24
CROSSWORDS.....24, 48

LETTERS19
OBITUARIES21
SIMON JENKINS18

ARTS39-41
CHESS & BRIDGE.....45
COURT & SOCIAL.....20

SPORT43-46, 48
MEDIA & MARKETING 23
LAW REPORT22

هنا من النحل

Truth under the covers: how a young MP kept his modesty

"I've slept with over 100 boys!" declared Peter Luff (C. Worcester) to the House yesterday. A lady tourist, ushered by chance into the Strangers' Gallery as Mr Luff spoke, dropped her jaw in amazement. So all those stories about Tory MPs were true! It really was as bad as the tabloid newspapers said! She struggled to her seat and sat down. Composing herself, she looked up, resuming her attention to the debate.

Luff warmed to his theme. "I was gagging," he cried, renewed horror clouding the tourist's gaze, "to see how we'd compare to a bunch of lechys lads out looking for a bit of skirt action!"

Our spectator was now thoroughly confused. Was it skirt action the MP for Worcester sought, or another kind of action? Or both? Was he one of these — what was the word? — bi-axial (or was it bi-focal?) politicians? Only last Wednesday, a press release from the BBC had promoted the Corporation's coverage of the Doncaster bi-election: maybe

MPs like this were elected at bi-elections?

Sadly, the truth was duller. Our tourist had missed the early part of Peter Luff's speech in support of his Bill on "Periodicals (Protection of Children)". Luff was not offering shock personal testimony; he was quoting from the magazines his Bill sought to improve. Madam Speaker braced herself as Luff announced: "Men unzipped: an intimate guide to men's minds (and bodies)". She flinched at his declaration "Boys in the

MATTHEW PARRIS
POLITICAL SKETCH

Buff — shots so hot we sealed the pages." She gripped the arms of her chair at the promise "Red hot! Sizzling male model posters inside."

In fact, young Mr Luff, fresh-faced and earnest, made his case well. His aim was to oblige teenage girls' magazines to declare what age range they were written for.

This, he believed, would be a discipline for editors and a guide to parents. He accepted the strength of the argument for freedom of publication, and answered it.

Speaking without preachiness, and allowing that modern teenagers did need more open discussion of sex (and at an earlier age) than had been thought proper when their parents were young, Luff's success proved what so many MPs seem to miss: that a case made carefully and without theatricality, an argument which acknowledges objections instead of ducking them, a theme expressed without pandering to the extremism of some supporters, can be the more powerful for its modesty. Luff's case was essentially for honest packaging rather than for censorship, and very hard to oppose.

This did not stop the Liberal

Democrats' dynamic and likeable Simon Hughes (South-west & Bermondsey) from opposing it. Opposing a Ten Minute Rule Bill is the only way any MP other than its proposer can get in on the act. Luff's theme will provide a number of radio and television opportunities in the weeks ahead. Broadcasters will be looking for an interested MP to put another view. Now they know where to look.

Mr Hughes was one of the few (among many anxious to speak) called in the much-broadcast 1994 debate on the homosexual age of consent. Opinion divided between proponents of 21, 18 and 16 as the right age. Hughes won his platform by moving an amendment proposing 17.

Yesterday, it is possible he was driven by a deeply felt objection to Mr Luff's proposals. It is possible that pigs will fly. It is possible that a day will come when Mr Hughes says something interesting. Yesterday was not the day.

Leading article, page 19

Clarke warns that welfare cuts could lead to riots

By NICHOLAS WOOD, CHIEF POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

SLASHING the welfare budget overnight could lead to riots in the streets, Kenneth Clarke warned the hardline Tory Right yesterday as he mapped out a gradual path to reducing state spending.

Reform of the £90 billion-a-year social security budget would inevitably be a lengthy process, the Chancellor said. Measures in hand were saving £5 billion a year and winning broad public support. But precipitate action could have disastrous consequences. "You cannot expect to get to grips with a burgeoning social security bill overnight," he said. "The recent events in France, riots on the streets of Paris, illustrate the social disruption which sudden reforms can bring."

Mr Clarke's remarks were a rebuff to rightwingers such as Norman Lamont, his predecessor, who, at the Tory conference in October, called for the transfer of large parts of the social security system to the private sector and new ways of funding health care. Some right-wingers believe that Britain will be able to compete internationally only if it is prepared to make room for decisive tax cuts by dismantling the welfare state and ending free health and education.

Rejecting this view, Mr

Clarke said: "I believe that we can have modern public services and, at the same time, be a low tax economy."

The Chancellor's remarks, at the London School of Economics, were also designed to kill off speculation of a rift with John Major over public spending and place the Chancellor in the mainstream of Tory thinking over tax, spending and the welfare state. In a speech agreed between the two men after a flurry of reports alleging tensions in Downing Street, the Chancellor reaffirmed his determination to reduce public spending to "below 40 per cent of gross domestic product".

He said he expected to achieve that important milestone by next year and would then go further. His remarks were in line with Mr Major's "aspiration" of spending at 35 per cent of GDP. "The Prime Minister and I have both said that we will achieve that target and we have both said that we will then aspire to reduce it further," he said. Spending at 42 per cent of GDP was down on its previous peaks of 43.5 per cent in the recession of the early 1990s, 45.5 per cent in the early 1980s and 47.25 per cent in the mid 1970s. The Chancellor said he expected state spending to remain broadly flat over the next three years.

Peter Riddell, page 10

Forces to keep ban on gays

By JAMES LANDALE
POLITICAL REPORTER

THE ban on homosexuality in the Armed Forces is to remain in force, it emerged yesterday. Michael Portillo, the Defence Secretary, will announce the decision later this month when the MoD publishes a long-awaited internal review of the policy. The move will come as a huge relief to service chiefs who have been fighting a two-year battle to prevent any relaxation in the law.

However, the decision will almost certainly prompt a clash between the Government and the European Court of Human Rights. Four former servicemen and women who were dismissed for their homosexuality have taken their cases to the European Court after their legal chalenge was rejected by the Appeal Court last year.

Although ministers have accepted the view of defence chiefs that homosexuality is incompatible with service life, they emphasise that the decision is not a moral judgement but a question of operational efficiency. They are understood to have rejected compromise proposals for a so-called "don't say, don't tell" policy.

Exhaust test suspended

CHECKS on exhaust fumes from thousands of "green" cars have been suspended after widespread discrepancies were found in the new MoT pollution test. The Transport Department admitted yesterday that it had told 18,000 MoT stations to suspend the special emissions test introduced to examine cars with catalytic converters.

German states in move to ban British beef

By ROGER BOYES IN BONN AND MICHAEL HORNSEY

GERMAN provincial governments were heading for a confrontation with Britain and the European Court of Justice last night after moving to ban all imports of British beef. The news was greeted with outrage by beef farmers.

In a renewed scare over BSE — bovine spongiform encephalopathy, the so-called mad cow disease — a ban has already been announced in Rhineland-Palatinate. It is likely to be adopted by all Germany's 16 regional states, which are angry at the way the issue of suspect cattle imports has been handled by the federal government.

Rhineland-Palatinate's ban is complete and will be strictly enforced. Every beef delivery in the region will have to be accompanied by a certificate stating that it is not of British origin.

Klaudia Martinez, the province's environment minister, said yesterday the ban was imposed out of frustration at "18 months of inactivity by the Federal Government".

The campaign against British beef in Germany has been gaining ground over the past few weeks. German scientists, such as the respected Professor Heino Düring of the Robert Koch Institute, have been advising that mad cow disease can be transmitted to humans, though Britain has always insisted that there is no scientific proof.

"Anyone who has been studying the pattern of infection between the most varied of mammals cannot deny that there is a relationship between BSE and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in humans," the professor said this week. Widespread publicity has also been given to reports suggesting that controls at British slaughterhouses are inadequate.

Sir David Naish, the president of the National Farmers' Union said at the union's annual conference in London yesterday: "I am appalled and horrified that a country which professes to be the most pro-European in the EU is taking illegal action which has no scientific justification and will only damage their own beef industry."

Martin Burt, chairman of the NFU's livestock committee who raises beef cattle near Whitby in Yorkshire said: "It is a disgraceful situation. We have been bending over backwards to make British beef as safe as possible. What more do we have to do to convince the Germans?"

A spokesman for the Ministry of Agriculture said: "This is a matter for the German government and the European Commission. Any unilateral ban by Germany would be unlawful and we are sure that the European Commission will take the appropriate action."

A German ban would have little immediate effect. Last year Germany imported no more than 200 tonnes of British beef. But if other EU states, such as France, which imported 80,000 tonnes of British beef in the first nine months of 1995, followed the German example the effects would be serious.

Universities press on with £300 charge

Universities are pushing ahead with plans for a £300 signing-on fee after being offered no long-term funding reform yesterday by Gillian Shephard, the Education and Employment Secretary. Mrs Shephard met vice-chancellors to try to defuse the dispute over university budgets, which led them to threaten a levy for students starting in 1997.

Professor Gareth Roberts, chairman of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, welcomed a move by Mrs Shephard to investigate the effect of cuts in last November's Budget. But he added: "On the crucial issue of longer term funding, Mrs Shephard provided no reassurance." Mrs Shephard promised further proposals before the vice-chancellors meet again on February 16. They hope these will amount to more than another inquiry.

Letters, page 19

Solicitors in legal limbo

Tens of thousands of solicitors in England and Wales are working in legal limbo, without a practising certificate because of the failure of a £2.5 million computer system at the Law Society. The society is now in breach of the Law Society Act 1974 of issuing certificates within 21 days of receiving a solicitor's application and accounting for the £50 million in fees paid by the applicants.

MoD sells top homes

The Mount in Gibraltar, worth more than £5 million, is among 31 homes that are earmarked for sale after a review of official service houses and senior officers' entertaining requirements. The Mount has a staff of 12 and cost £37,500 to maintain over two years. The MoD said that occupiers of the 44 surviving residences would have their full-time staff, including cooks and gardeners, cut from 234 to 108. Residence staff cost about £5 million a year.

Hostage radio appeal

Relatives and friends of four Britons held hostage in a remote jungle region of Indonesia yesterday appealed for their release in a broadcast on the BBC World Service. There has been no news of William Oates, Daniel Sturt, Annette van der Kolk and Anna McIvor, all Cambridge University students, for ten days. Maarten van der Kolk, father of Annette, 21, said: "Whatever the cause, we urge Kallik Kwallik [the rebel leader] to make contact and free them right away."

Man held over murder

Detectives were questioning a man last night over the kidnap and murder of Diana Goldsmith, whose disappearance in January last year after she dropped her three children at school has remained a mystery. The 28-year-old man was arrested in southeast London after an appeal by Kent police on the anniversary of the incident. The body of Mrs Goldsmith, 45, former common-law wife of the multi-millionaire investor Derek Goldsmith, has not been found.

Lorry driver jailed

A Belgian lorry driver who was falling asleep behind the wheel when he crashed to death a motorcyclist was jailed for three years yesterday for causing death by dangerous driving. Relatives of the victim, Charles Mitchell, condemned as inadequate the sentence on Eddy De Meersman, who pleaded not guilty. He had driven more than 600 miles in breach of European Union regulations when he crashed on the A1 near Newark, Nottinghamshire.

Sunbeds death warning

A skin specialist criticised the use of sunbeds after the death of a Dublin man who had 70 per cent burns. Sean Kelly, 39, who had the skin condition psoriasis, died in hospital on Monday of a heart attack. It is understood he had three minutes on a health club sunbed on January 22 and returned next day for a second session of unknown length. Dr Gillian Murphy, a consultant at Beaumont Hospital, Dublin, said: "Nobody should use sunbeds. They are unnecessary."

Threat to royal firemen

Two of Britain's best-known volunteer fire brigades, at Gordonstoun school and Balmoral, are under threat from local authority budget cuts, it was claimed yesterday. The Fire Brigades Union said that Grampian fire service was being forced into a £1.6 million spending reduction which would mean the closure of six of its part-time fire stations. One of the brigades is based at the Queen's holiday home and is manned by 20 workers on the Balmoral estate.

5 things you didn't know about life after death.

- 1 The average 'breadwinner' is insured for only 2 years' earnings.
- 2 The average mortgage-linked life policy covers the house but will rarely provide for the family.
- 3 The average family spends more than £800 a month.
- 4 A widow/widower with 2 children can receive as little as £79 a week from the state.
- 5 It can cost as little as 27p a day to protect your family with £100,000 life cover*.

It's an alarming fact that many people are seriously under-insured. Some of them are simply not aware how much money their family would need, should the worst happen. Others may believe that the necessary life cover would be too costly for them to afford.

In reality, you can give your family the security they need for as little as a few pence a day.

Allied Dunbar's straightforward term assurance can provide a substantial sum to your dependants should you die within the period insured — at a price that's real value. Depending on your pension arrangements you may be able to obtain tax relief, which means your monthly

Call now for a personal quote on 0800 888 666

Any time between 7am-10pm, 7 days a week.

Alternatively, visit us on the Internet at <http://www.allieddunbar.co.uk> for a quote, visit type information on WWWriting, online.

contributions can work out to be as little as 27p a day for each £100,000 worth of cover*. Even better, you may qualify for higher rate income tax relief on your contributions — meaning you can get even more protection for your money.

And applying is simple: we can take most of your details over the phone. Call us now for more information and a personal quote and we'll send you a free Allied Dunbar ballpoint pen. Alternatively, if you visit us on the Internet you can obtain your quote plus some free information on Will Writing from our site. Either way, you'll make sure your family gets the right protection — at the right price.

BT

For the life you don't yet know

Straw's jury plan

Continued from page 1
juries such as lawyers, policemen, the judiciary, those with a criminal record, the mentally ill and the clergy. Anyone else between 18 and 70 is qualified to serve on a jury provided they are on the electoral roll. But self-employed people also wriggle out of jury service, by failing to put their names on the electoral register. They argue that the subsistence allowance, a basic £44.80 a day, does not compensate for loss of earnings.

"Jury service should be brought back to being an obligation that everyone has to fulfill," Mr Straw told The Times. "The fact that some people can avoid responsibility has quite significant practical consequences because you get juries that don't properly reflect society and may be more prone to acquit people."

Mr Straw would tighten up the law to require people to do jury service when asked, rather than giving jury officers total discretion over whether to accept excuses. He points out that in 1988 the law was relaxed making it easier for people to get out of jury service by asking for it to be deferred.

The jury summoning official can also use his discretion to excuse people altogether. A prospective juror is told that the trial will last about 10 working days, but if the trial is expected to be longer the juror will be asked at court if this would be difficult.

Figures produced by the House of Commons Library show that the number of acquittals in contested cases before Crown Courts has risen in recent years. In 1986-87 half the cases resulted in acquittals, but in 1994-95 this rose to 60 per cent.

BOOK A VALENTINE
£69 SPECIAL
ON EUROSTAR
TO PARIS
OR BRUSSELS.

0345 881 881

Ask for details about special offers in English, French, Spanish and German. From 1st April 1996, only 2 nights of a 3-night stay, or 3 nights of a 4-night stay.

Thousand in worst d

Search team stranded on V

A survivor's guide

Scotland cut off as snow wreaks travel chaos

The scene in Crawshawbooth, Lancashire, yesterday. left. A woman was flown to hospital in Dumfries after going into labour. Rescue helicopters replaced ambulances to move patients both north and south of the border

Thousands marooned in worst drifts for years

By STEPHEN FARRELL
GILLIAN BOWDITCH AND
KATE ALDERSON

THOUSANDS of people spent a second night stranded on the road as rescue workers battled to clear drifts from roads blocked by the worst snow for years.

Territorial Army trucks will this morning join the effort to help drivers stuck in the Lockerbie area of Dumfries and Galloway.

Scotland was virtually cut off as 1,000 vehicles - 400 cars and 600 lorries - were left abandoned on an 18-mile stretch of road on the main Carlisle to Glasgow A74.

In northern England, motorists driving north through Cumbria were told to turn back as the roads were closed by police and told to spend the night in emergency reception centres. Rescue helicopters both north and south of the border were used to ferry patients unable to move by ambulance.

One Royal Navy rescue helicopter from Prestwick picked up a Dumfries woman who went into labour with twins. It also took a pregnant woman from Stranraer and a four-week baby in an incubator from Ayr to hospital. Another helicopter, from RAF Boulmer in Northumberland, took three kidney patients needing dialysis treatment to hospital in Carlisle.

Inspector George Graham, of Dumfries and Galloway Police, said 3,000 people had been put up at the Lockerbie rescue centre, the largest of seven centres. Twelve police four-wheel drive vehicles worked to bring frozen passengers through closed roads to hotels and hostels. Another six will join them from Nunfield Territorial Army Barracks today.

At Abington Welcome Break service station on the M74 in Lanarkshire, voluntary workers had to turn drivers away after their car park filled up. Police insisted the only people still left in their cars were lorry drivers with enough food and heat in their cabs to get through the problems.

Laura Blyth, who works at the Abington station, said they were coping well in the circumstances. "Some drivers are facing a second night here.

Many are sleeping in their cars and just coming in from time to time for provisions and amenities. We've provided people with food and warmth."

One motorist, Arthur Murrell, told of how he survived on a few Trebor mints as he waited to be rescued.

Another, Ewan Campbell, 33, his wife and 15-month-old daughter were stuck in their car for eight hours from Monday afternoon until 1.30am yesterday. "We had to give a berth to some of the lorries as they were swerving all over the roads as they tried to get traction on the ice," he said.

Mr Campbell, who was driving home to County Durham, was rescued by police and taken to the rescue centre at Moffat.

They like the hundreds of

A snow leopard at Marwell Zoological Park

others, will not be able to move until later today at the earliest.

Even the AA rescue vehicles were not immune to the weather conditions. An AA serviceman, Derek Watson, started rescuing stranded motorists at 8am on Monday. By 3pm he was in the same predicament as the drivers, stuck on the A74. He finally dug himself out at noon yesterday.

RAF helicopter rescues 19 trapped on train

By JONATHAN PEYNN
TRANSPORT CORRESPONDENT

RAILWAYS

AN RAF helicopter picked up 19 people from a snow-bound train yesterday as the weather caused havoc with rail services.

The Wessex rescue helicopter was called in when ScotRail's 7.02am service from Stranraer to Glasgow became stuck in a high moorland cutting near Girvan, about 45 minutes into its journey.

The aircraft, based at Aldergrove, near Belfast, was on a training mission and had landed at HMS Gannet, near Prestwick, when it was pressed into service to rescue the 16 passengers and three crew.

They were flown about ten miles to the village of Barrhill where they were given hot food at an hotel before being taken by road to Stranraer or run by the two newly privatised rail operators, Great Western and South West Trains, were badly affected. Great Western had to provide a bus service for InterCity passengers between Exeter and Plymouth when sea defences were breached near Dawlish in Devon.

Railtrack blamed a combination of unusually high tides, storm-force winds and crumbling sandstone cliffs along the exposed stretch of track for the delay.

Commuter services run by South West Trains were left in chaos when five trains broke down early yesterday.

There were further delays and cancellations during the evening rush-hour as South West struggled to cope with the disruption caused by the three inches of snow that blanketed Hampshire and Surrey.

Search team saves rock climber stranded on Welsh mountain

By RUSSELL JENKINS
AND GILLIAN BOWDITCH

A ROCK climber was rescued early yesterday morning as he clung to a ledge on a 700ft frozen waterfall by his ice pick for more than 12 hours. The rescue party battled through driving snow on mountains near Dinas Mawddwy, south of Dolgellau in Gwynedd, to reach Charles Wallace, 47, of Coven, near Wolverhampton.

His cries for help were heard by a farmer, Wyn Jones, who was tending his sheep nearby. He alerted the Cumbria and Wales search and rescue team who made their way from Aberdovey to the Nant Maes Glasau Falls.

Mr Wallace was criticised by David Williams, 46, a Snowdonia Park warden and leader of the nine-man rescue team, for making fundamental errors. Mr Williams said: "First, he went solo in an area he didn't know and when he wasn't aware of the standard of climbing required. Second, if he had listened to the weather forecast he would have known that the conditions weren't suitable."

It was lashing with snow. The climber had managed to drag himself off the ice on to a small frozen ledge, securing himself with an ice-axe. He had no torch and it was very difficult to hear him above the blizzard.

Mr Williams said that apart from being cold, the climber was not injured and had done all the right things once he became stuck.

In Cumbria, a solicitor was trapped in the heavy snow on Monday night three miles from Whitehaven. David Hammond, telephoned colleagues at his Sunderland law firm and told them he had been forced to wrap himself in newspapers to keep warm as he had no blankets or warm clothing with him. Yesterday colleagues said Mr Hammond still appeared to be missing.

Meanwhile, 50 disabled children and staff who were trapped inside Mayfield School, near Whitehaven, on Monday night by deep snow-drifts were forced to sleep in the school building overnight. All made it home yesterday.

"These youngsters were very upset and, because of the nature of their disabilities, many have been unable to comprehend why they weren't allowed to go home last night," said Ann Gregg, chairwoman of the governors. Thousands of other children enjoyed a day off from classes when their schools were closed for the day. Some were kept at home by their parents for the second day running. Schools were closed throughout the Dumfries and Galloway region in the Scottish borders, which suffered blizzard conditions.

In South Wales more than 120 schools and colleges were closed for the day. Another 250 schools were shut across Glamorgan, Clywd and West Wales. More than 60 schools in Gloucestershire, most of them in the Forest of Dean, were closed after up to nine inches of snow fell.

Senior educationalists complained that the closures were the worst in 15 years and fear that the disruption to school work may go on for some days ahead.

Four robbers armed with an eight inch knife and a handgun stripped a man of his trousers and made him sit in the snow while they stole his belongings. He had to walk the two miles home in a blizzard without his trousers. The 26-year-old was mugged in Eggbaston, Birmingham, as snow fell on Monday night. The attackers ran off taking his white trousers with them, £55 cash and a building society book.

Police arrested a burglar after tracking him through the snow to his home. The man broke into a neighbour's garage and took a wheelbarrow, leaving tracks which police were able to follow to his house in a nearby road in Swindon, Wiltshire.

A survivor's guide to beating freeze

IN NORFOLK the winter of 1963 was nearly as bad as that of 1947. Returning from seeing a patient in the early hours, even my overpowered Mini Cooper fitted with snow tyres was unable to penetrate the drifts. Reaching a night in the snow I started to dig. In the distance I could see the local authority grilling lorry similarly stranded.

After hours of digging I was away and as I slithered past the lorry I saw that my old friend, one-eyed Kelly Hodds, the local roadman, was tucked up in the cabin, head covered with balachava as well as a hat, his hands with gloves and mittens, and he was wearing an ex-Army greatcoat over layers of pullovers.

The exhaust of the lorry was well above the level of the snow and with the heater on and his engine running he was as warm and comfortable as a bug in a bed. He wound down the window and shouted: "So sorry - I didn't see it was you doctor. If I had I would have lent a hand." A true knight of the road.

The AA's advice is not to travel in the snow unless it is essential but, if it is, to take a shovel, blankets, a flask with a hot drink and chocolates or other calorie-rich snacks. When stuck, the association recommends that the snow from in front of all four wheels should be cleared, the wheels should be straightened and earth or sacking should be put beneath the back wheels and then cross your fingers and hope to get away.

Cold kills and as the body's temperature falls the intellect becomes blurred, decisions are unreliable and death may approach unnoticed. Heat has to be preserved. The AA would have thoroughly approved of Kelly Hodds's precautions. Put on as many layers of clothing as is possible. Never forget that the clothed body loses not less than 25 per cent of its heat through the head, so that too should be covered. Drivers who venture out into blizzards should carry bin liners as mountain walkers do. A couple of bin liners with a hole cut in one for the head will keep anybody as warm as Mr Hodds. The principle is always that the more layers the better, with each layer of clothing looser than the one beneath it.

The AA recommends that when several cars are stranded passengers should move into one of them; the more bodies there are huddled together the greater the heat generated. A scarf should be tied to the aerial to attract attention. Engines and heaters can be left running provided that there is a clear airway so that the exhaust fumes can be blown away.

The youngest and fittest should be sent out to brave the blizzard and the windchill factor. Ageing and obstructed coronary arteries are vulnerable to cold.

Hot soup is ideal sustenance, enhancing morale and providing a few calories. Chocolate is also excellent. Alcohol is a mistake, it may make life seem better for the stranded traveller but it increases the rate of heat loss. Do not touch metal parts of the car with bare hands. Contact with cold metal at very low temperatures soon causes frostbite.

DR THOMAS
STUTTAFORD

GROLSCH (UK) LIMITED

IMPORTANT RECALL ANNOUNCEMENT.

Grolsch Premium Lager "Stubby" 25cl ten pack.

This announcement only applies to 25cl (stubby) bottles of Grolsch Premium Lager purchased before today - 7th February. Any other size bottles or cans of Grolsch are not affected by this recall.

There is a slight risk that upon opening, you may find that small fragments of glass are present. The affected bottles are green with a white and green label and are all 25cl, intended to be supplied in packs of 10.

As a precautionary measure, please take any un-opened bottles bought before 7th February, back to the shop from which they were bought for a full refund.

We apologise for any inconvenience caused. Grolsch in "stubbies" will be back on sale at your normal supplier in the near future, clearly marked as "OK" stock.

In case of difficulty, please contact our Consumer Help Line on Freephone 0800 371166. Lines open 8.00am - 6.00pm, Monday-Friday.

LIKELY MATHS QUESTIONS FOR A NINE-YEAR-OLD

Question 1
This is a list of the highest temperatures each day for one week.

DAY	TEMPERATURE
Sunday	6°C
Monday	5°C
Tuesday	8°C
Wednesday	12°C
Thursday	13°C
Friday	11°C
Saturday	7°C

How many degrees warmer was it on the hottest day than on the coldest day?

Here is a chart of the temperatures. Saturday is missing.

Question 2

Here is a row of numbers

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18

Find three numbers that add up to 30. Draw a ring round them.

Question 3

Write in the missing number.

□ ÷ 5 = 22

Alarm over low standards

Junior schools may test pupils at nine

By DAVID CHARTER, EDUCATION CORRESPONDENT

GILLIAN SHEPARD is asking her curriculum advisers to consider introducing formal tests for nine-year-olds in an effort to counter widespread alarm about primary school standards.

The Education and Employment Secretary called for research on testing at nine after the first national results at 11, published last week, showed worryingly low achievement levels in English and mathematics. Concern deepened yesterday when Chris Woodhead, the Chief Inspector of Schools, singled out primary teachers for criticism over the way standards slip between the ages of seven and nine.

Mrs Shepard has also asked officials from the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority to devise ways of assessing five-year-olds so their progress can be constantly checked against national targets. Ministers believe regular test results will bring pressure from parents for standards to be raised if schools are under-performing. The latest results for 11-year-olds showed 48 per cent reached the expected standard in English and 44 per cent in mathematics. For seven-year-olds, the figures were 75.5 per cent and 78 per cent, while at 14 they were 55 per cent and 57 per cent.

Mr Woodhead, writing in The Times, said: "The quality of teaching in the junior age range must be improved significantly in perhaps half of all primary schools."

The authority's own report on last year's tests highlighted concerns that the four-year gap between tests at 7 and 11 should be bridged by some form of assessment. The report said: "Some teachers have suggested that, to track children's progress across the four years more effectively, there could perhaps be more formal assessment halfway through the key stage."

The report added that any move to introduce tests at nine "would need to be balanced against the implications that such assessment would have for teachers' workload, and the costs of providing the necessary materials."

Mrs Shepard has ruled out making any new tests compulsory since the national curriculum framework is fixed until 2000. It would be the 1997-98 school year before tests at nine could be piloted and only after that would they be offered to schools as an option.

Teachers unions are sceptical of the value of more tests. Nigel de Gruchy, general secretary of the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers, said: "We cannot have testing all the time because there would be no time for teaching. If it is going to mean extra work we may have to consider re-introducing our boycott of testing."

Simon Jenkins, page 18

Tovarisch crew members with their cars in Newcastle: "In the Ukraine we will be the envy of our friends"

Away the Ladas for stranded crew

FIVE Ukrainian sailors stranded on Tyneside for ten months are setting off for home in a convoy of three battered old Ladas.

They are the remaining crew members from the tall ship Tovarisch, marooned since last April, when safety experts declared that it would cost £2 million to make her seaworthy. Since then, they have been relying on the generosity of local people for food and clothing.

The original crew of 34 dwindled away to just Captain Oleg Vandenko and five shipmates, who have spent two months repairing the Ladas, which they bought for £1,200. On Friday, they will drive to Harwich for the Hamburg ferry. In the best tradition, Captain Vandenko will stay with his ship.

Valera Karpenkov, 25, the third mate, said: "Everyone has been great but I haven't seen my wife Natalie and my home in Lvov for almost a year."

"In England there are many jokes about Ladas, but in the Ukraine we will be the envy of our friends." His crewmate Vasily Fesenko, 23, was married just six months before he set sail for Britain. He said: "We spent what was left of our savings and money from home on the cars. They look good as new."

One local garage, Central Motors in North Shields, even spent three days working on one car free of charge to make sure it is ready.

The crew's wages were still paid direct to their families back in the Ukraine, but a lack of foreign reserves saw their overseas allowances run dry. They were looked after by the Tovarisch Support Group, which includes youngsters from inner-city estates in North Tyneside and Newcastle. The bond was formed during the 1993 Tall Ships Race when some of the youngsters enjoyed a sail training course on the ship.

The Tovarisch was brought back to Tyneside in April by the Coalition Against Crime, which bought 1,200 sail training places for underprivileged youngsters. The group was originally told the Tovarisch could be repaired for £500,000. She is now at North Shields, as the support group try to raise funds to sail her. The crew will be back in six months.

It's a matter of taste.

MD

Most of us care about what we eat, but don't want to compromise on taste. Introducing Pact and Gaio. Pact is a reduced fat spread made with buttermilk to give it a distinctly buttery taste. It is also enriched with Omega 3, the same essential nutrient that is found in fresh fish. Gaio is low in fat and comes in a range of delicious flavours. Gaio contains Causido Culture which means that it not only tastes good - but can help maintain your body's natural balance by lowering cholesterol when eaten as part of a low fat diet. So why not cut out the coupons below and taste them for yourselves.

FOR FURTHER PRODUCT INFORMATION, PLEASE CALL THE FOLLOWING NUMBERS:

Pact: 0161 339 5584 Gaio: 0161 343 5774

30p OFF
WHEN YOU PURCHASE ANY 4 OR 8 PACK OF Gaio
WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS
Valid until 31.3.96 See below for details.

TO THE CUSTOMER
This coupon can only be used in part payment against one purchase of any 4 or 8 pack of Gaio. Please present this coupon with the product at the checkout. Only one coupon per purchase. Valid until 31.3.96.

TO THE RETAILER
MD Foods Plc will redeem this coupon for 30p plus the standard handling allowance, provided that it has been accepted for part payment for any 4 or 8 pack of Gaio and no other item. MD reserves the right to refuse payment against misused coupons.
Redemption address:
MD Foods Plc, Dept 513 (NCH), Corby, Northants NN17 1NN.

0443 0519

9 900314 230302

COUPON
30p OFF
Pact with compliments

TO THE CUSTOMER
This coupon can only be used in part payment against one purchase of either a 250g or 500g tub of Pact. Please present this coupon with the product at the checkout. Only one coupon per purchase. Valid until 31.3.96.

TO THE RETAILER
MD Foods Plc will redeem this coupon for 30p plus the standard handling allowance, provided that it has been accepted for either one 250g or 500g tub of Pact. Please return the coupon no later than two months after the consumer date date, to: MD Foods Plc, Dept 513 (NCH), Corby, Northants NN17 1NN.
0443 02744

9 900314 240301

Footballer jailed for killing man with a kick

By JOANNA BALE

A SOCCER player was jailed for five years yesterday for killing a man by kicking his head like a football.

James Kelly, 22, of first division club Wolverhampton Wanderers, was seen to "volley" Peter Dunphy in an early-morning brawl outside a hotel after being refused entry to a party. Liverpool Crown Court was told that Mr Dunphy, 26, died immediately.

Mr Justice Kay told Kelly, who admitted manslaughter: "It may well be that a sentence of imprisonment will ruin your chosen career, but you will be able to rebuild your life in the future. The deceased is denied that opportunity."

Kelly's 22-year-old brother, John, and Kevin Atkinson were jailed for nine months after admitting assault. The assault happened when Kelly, of Willenhall, West Midlands, and his friends were refused entry to the Bradford Hotel in Liverpool in September 1994. A night porter who heard a distinctive crack, told police: "I don't think he could have kicked him any harder." Afterwards, Kelly shouted: "You wanted it and you got it. You should have let us in." The former England and Wolves manager, Graham Taylor, described Kelly as "extremely popular, trustworthy and with an excellent reputation".

Pollution inspectors prepare for dirty fight

By NICK NUTTALL

INSPECTORS joining the new Environment Agency will be offered clip-on ties, ultrasonic stun-guns and courses in unarmed combat to deal with scrapmetal merchants with big dogs.

The agency, which comes into force in the spring, merges the National Rivers Authority, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution and regional waste authorities. A priority is to crack down on flytippers and companies using small rubbish or scrapmetal merchants to dump toxic waste.

A national force of inspectors will be better placed to pick up the illegal shipping of hazardous wastes from one region to another. Dr Peter Hinchcliffe, head of waste regulation, said inspectors were likely to face violent situations as "they turned up the heat on some of the small operators who have ignored proper waste disposal procedures".

Ed Gallagher, chief executive of the agency, said: "Those in local authority waste regulation units have recently been on a course in unarmed combat. This is so they can deal with the illegal end of the waste disposal market safely. By this I mean the scrapmetal dealer with two rottweilers."

Rattle to step down as musical director

By DALYA ALBERGE
ARTS CORRESPONDENT

SIR Simon Rattle is to step down as musical director of the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra. It was announced last night.

By 1998, when Rattle's contract expires, he will have been with them for 18 years: he joined the CBSO in 1980 as principal conductor and became music director in 1991. After his contract ends, he will work with them as a guest conductor. Edward Smith, chief executive of the CBSO, said Sir Simon had not been appointed to another orchestra.

Rattle, 41, who is widely regarded as the most brilliant conductor of his generation, said last night: "The position of music director requires 150 per cent energy and commitment, and there are only so many years that any person can keep up the sheer intensity necessary. I will look forward to giving the orchestra I love, and respect so much, of my best as a guest from 1998 onwards. I will continue to work with the CBSO more than any other orchestra - our musical bond is bound to endure."

He added: "My years with the CBSO have been the most

Rattle will continue to work with CBSO satisfying and fulfilling that any musician could imagine. With the consistent wholehearted support of the city, we have travelled a long road and have remained not only a good team but good friends."

Rattle has been acclaimed as a guest conductor with orchestras round the world. Sir Michael Checkland, the CBSO's chairman, said: "All of us cannot thank Sir Simon enough for his outstanding and challenging artistic leadership over so many years. It has been his total dedication to the orchestra which has transformed the CBSO into the very fine organisation it is today."

Joan Collins for pride at after novel

Seaman saved by sister who begged
Blight's pardon

Blue light wins honour in a flash

Hundreds of asthma deaths 'are due to wrong treatment'

By JEREMY LAURANCE, HEALTH CORRESPONDENT

MORE than 1,000 people are dying from asthma in Britain each year because doctors prescribe the wrong drugs, experts said yesterday. Many chronic sufferers are given treatments that relieve their wheezing but do not tackle the underlying condition. Under-treatment can result in permanent damage to the lungs and increases the risk of a severe attack leading to hospitalisation or death. A global campaign has now been launched to improve treatment of the condition, which affects 150 million people worldwide. It has risen by more than 50 per cent in most affluent countries since 1970 but the reasons for the rise are not understood. Asthma is the only preventable disease for which deaths in Europe and the America have risen over the past 20 years. The Global Initiative for Asthma, started by the World Health Organisation and the US National Heart Lung and Blood Institute, has produced treatment guidelines for doctors and patients. Dr Romain Pauwels, chairman of the Initiative and Professor of Respiratory Diseases at the University of Ghent, Belgium, said yesterday: "Between 60 and 70 per cent of deaths from asthma could be prevented with modern treatment. We are confident 100,000 lives a year could be saved worldwide by our programme. Modern treatment can reverse the disease and allow most of those affected to lead a normal life." Advice has changed since the mid-1980s, when patients were told to use bronchodilators to ease their wheezing and switch to anti-inflammatory steroid inhalers only when their disease became too severe to control in this way. Now experts say patients using a bronchodilator three times a week should switch immediately to inhaled steroids to prevent damage to their lungs. Professor Albert Sheffer of Harvard Medical School said: "Earlier intervention with inhaled anti-inflammatory drugs gives the best hope for a future free of asthma. Nobody should die, lose a night's sleep or a day's work." Dr Martyn Partridge, a consultant chest physician in London, said that British studies showed a quarter of asthma patients were being prescribed bronchodilators at a level which suggested they should have been switched to inhaled steroids. "Giving bronchodilators is like painting over rust or sticking a plaster on a boil. It does not treat the underlying condition," he said. The global initiative is funded by 15 drug companies. Panel members said that, although inhaled steroids are more expensive, they save costs by reducing hospital admissions and days lost.

Donor puts 'fatally ill' baby on road to recovery

By TIM JONES

A BABY who has spent most of her seven months in a sterile plastic bubble has returned from hospital in Newcastle to Ireland after recovering from a usually fatal condition. Soon after Carol O'Gorman was born, Breda, her mother, told her three other children that their new sister would die. Carol was diagnosed as suffering from Severe Combined Immunodeficiency, a rare genetic flaw in which the body's main defence against infection is not properly formed. Dr Terry Flood, a specialist in paediatric immunology at Newcastle General Hospital, knew her only hope lay in a bone marrow transplant. No donors could be found in her family but, against the odds, an unrelated donor was found and her condition improved, although she remains ill.

Breda O'Gorman with Carol, who spent months in a sterile plastic bubble

Arthritis clue may rewrite treatment

By NIGEL HAWKES, SCIENCE EDITOR

A NEW approach to treating rheumatoid arthritis could come from studies at Birmingham University that have clarified the causes of the disease. Professor Paul Bacon, of the department of rheumatology, said that the discovery had revolutionised the way scientists thought about the disease. Far from being the product of an overactive immune system, he said, it is caused by an immune system that is too sluggish in some respects. This means that drugs that aim to suppress the immune system may be the wrong approach to treating the disease. Rheumatoid arthritis often starts as a flu-like illness. The body's immune system produces killer T-cells to destroy the infection and, once they have done so, they should disappear in a process known as apoptosis. In arthritis, the Birmingham work has shown, these cells linger in the joints, causing damage that leads to chronic disease and pain.

Doctor with a book 75% pay for job in Brit.

Judge held responsible for damage to boat

Consultant says he was framed over man's death

By RICHARD DUCE

A CONSULTANT told the High Court yesterday that a former Health Secretary, a senior civil servant and health chiefs orchestrated a plot in which he was "framed and set up" when the death of a patient exposed a shortage of neurosurgical beds. Anthony Percy, accused Virginia Bottomley of conspiring with William Wells, chairman of South Thames Regional Health Authority, to deflect criticism from the fact that a dying patient had to be flown 200 miles from Queen Mary's Hospital, Sidcup, to a bed in Leeds. Mr Percy, 55, said the plot involved Stephen Collinson, chief executive of Queen Mary's Hospital, and a senior civil servant. Mr Percy was called "Dr Dolittle" by the Daily Mirror after he was criticised in a report for not attending Malcolm Murray, who was taken to Queen Mary's Hospital with serious head injuries. Mr Percy is claiming damages from Mirror Group Newspapers which, he claims, suggested in an article on March 29 and two further reports that he was guilty of gross dereliction of duty, bore some responsibility for Mr Murray's death and should be suspended. The publisher denies libel. Mr Percy said Mr Collinson had sent him a letter saying it was politically inevitable that scapegoats would be required.

George Carman, QC, for MGN, said: "You realise you are making extremely serious allegations?" Mr Percy: "A very serious allegation has been made against me. The facts were manipulated." Mr Carman: "Are you suggesting that the inquiries were conducted dishonestly?" Mr Percy: "If manipulation is dishonest, manipulation is a word I would prefer to use." Earlier, Mr Percy, of Bickley, Kent, said: "I feel like a criminal. I feel that my reputation and my whole life is in question and I feel very strongly about it. I shall live with those headlines for the rest of my life." He said that, in an "anonymous" meeting with Mr Collinson three weeks after Mr Murray died, he was put under pressure to say he could have done more to save Mr Murray. Mr Percy said he had been interviewed two weeks earlier by an inquiry panel at Queen Mary's Hospital during a "friendly and informal" meeting when no criticism was levelled against him. In a report by Mr Wells for the South Thames authority, Mr Percy was criticised for failing to attend the hospital but Mr Percy said he was never interviewed by the chairman or any other members of the inquiry team. The trial continues.

Schoolgirl 'bride' flies home denying she is pregnant

By BILL FROST AND ANDREW FINKEL IN ISTANBUL

SARAH COOK, the 13-year-old girl who illegally married a Turkish waiter she met on a family holiday, was back in Britain last night having denied reports that she was pregnant. The teenager arrived at Heathrow yesterday afternoon on a Turkish Airlines jet, accompanied by her mother, Jackie, 39, who, according to Miss Cook, had convinced to return home. Dressed in a peasant headscarf and long red coat, Miss Cook was last off the flight. Turkey had paid a regretful farewell to the girl from Bournemouth, Essex, who had earned the title of the "nation's daughter-in-law". Also on a weekly news magazine of Islamic bent, believed that the pressure for her to return had been caused less out of concern for her welfare and more out of anger that she had rejected her Western roots. The girl's mother came to symbolise, in parts of the Turkish press, the wrath of a scorned Western culture. "Torn between two mothers," said the daily Hurriyet with Miss Cook depicted between her mother (in stretch pants) and mother-in-law (with her head covered, in Islamic fashion, like the girl). Yesterday at Heathrow, police covered Miss Cook's head with a blanket as they escorted her to a car, and Mrs Cook and her daughter were driven away to avoid the media. Before leaving Istanbul, the girl told journalists that, contrary to stories in the Turkish press, she was not pregnant. Her father-in-law had told a news agency that she was expecting his son's child. When asked about Mustafa Kozdagac, the 18-year-old she had "married" in his home village of Kahramanmaraş and who is now in jail on a charge of statutory rape, Miss Cook said: "They are taking my husband away. We will wait for each other and I will return to him as soon as I can - if I get my passport back." The teenager, who had been ordered back to Britain by a High Court judge on January 26, said she had not wanted to return. However, having been made a Ward of Court, she felt she had no alternative. "If I did not go, they might have sent my parents to prison."

Sarah Cook felt she had no option but to return

Eat out for a fiver

THE TIMES
Eat out for £5 VOUCHER

The new Club World seat. A huge improvement.

Now we're giving you more room in new Club World. Not only will you enjoy the unique new cradle seat, but 55 percent extra legroom. Two of the sizeable differences you'll find on new Club World.

BRITISH AIRWAYS
The world's favourite airline

Doctor with dog took 75% pay cut for job in Britain

By PAUL WILKINSON

AN AMERICAN doctor whose new British employers paid for his rottweiler and eight-year-old pick-up truck to be brought from Missouri said yesterday they were all he had left after a messy divorce settlement.

As part of the relocation package for Dr Craig Baldwin, who has remarried, the Hartlepool General Hospital in Cleveland agreed to pay £2,300 for quarantine and travel for Fritz and shipping the vehicle.

Dr Baldwin, 52, who was recruited as a £52,000-a-year consultant anaesthetist, said he had decided to make a fresh start here with his new wife Tricia, 51. "I have spent 12 years going back and forth to court. I was left nearly bankrupt. I liquidated my assets and handed them over to her [his ex-wife] so she would leave me alone."

"I agreed to come over to work in England as long as my dog and truck came and that was accepted as relocation expense. I hope people do not think I am costing the trust extortionate amounts of money. I took a 70 per cent pay cut to come here."

"There were many reasons I wanted to come to England, but one thing that would have stopped me was if Fritz could not come. I don't think it was unreasonable of the trust to pay the bill. I didn't make the quarantine laws. My truck is a 1988 GMC pick-up with 75,000 miles on the clock. The resale value would be virtually nil. I need a vehicle and could not afford to buy a new one in England, where prices are double those in the States."

Brian Flannan, chairman of the Hartlepool and Hartlepool NHS Trust, said: "Nationally, there is a problem getting qualified staff and some trusts have had to hire consultants at double the going rate, paying £100,000. We have avoided doing that and believe this one-off payment was money well spent."

Craig Baldwin was prepared to work here only if Fritz and the vehicle came too

Peer suffered from rare condition

Duke's death caused by drug poisoning

By DOMINIC KENNEDY

THE mystery surrounding the death of the Duke of Northumberland, one of Britain's most flamboyant peers, was cleared up yesterday when an inquest was told that he died of amphetamine poisoning.

An earlier hearing was adjourned after a post-mortem examination had failed to find a natural cause for the 17-stone duke's collapse.

The 42-year-old bachelor was taking a daily average of 20 of the tablets, which can be used as a recreational drug, but had been prescribed for a rare medical condition.

The 11th duke, a godson of the Queen, had almost four times as much amphetamine in his system when he died as most people would have who were using the drug therapeutically. "He didn't intend the outcome," said Dr John Burton, the West London Coroner, "therefore I will put it down as an accidental death."

The duke, Richard Henry

The duke was found dead in his bedroom

Alan Walter Percy, was found dead by his valet, Brinley Moralee, at Syon House in west London. The duke's body was by his bed and he appeared to have died while getting up. His tablets were arranged on a cabinet.

Margery Meakes, personal assistant to the duke, said: "He would fall asleep often during the day because he couldn't sleep at night."

The coroner read a report that said the duke's medical condition began to deteriorate in his early 20s. He lost weight and developed depression. He was prescribed amphetamine and then became very heavy.

David O'Connell, the duke's doctor since 1990, diagnosed a rare disorder of the glands, hypogonadotropic hypogonadism, which causes sleep problems and excess weight. The duke was given Dexedrine, which contains amphetamine, to keep him awake during the day. To reverse that, he was prescribed sleeping pills for the night. By August 1995, he was taking a daily average of 20 Dexedrine pills and up to 20 Parlemin.

The coroner said: "There is absolutely no question of these being used as drugs of addiction in this case."

Dr Richard Shepherd, a pathologist at Guy's Hospital, said death was due to amphetamine poisoning causing an irregular heart beat which led to heart failure.

Judge held responsible for damage to boat

DAMAGE to a fishing vessel was the legal responsibility of a judge who had ordered it to be seized, the Admiralty Court ruled yesterday.

Judge Richard Holloway signed a document in April 1992 ordering bailiffs to immobilise the Sincerity S at Fisherman's Wharf in Maryport, Cumbria, in an action over an alleged £734 debt. However, two engineers who carried out the job, by removing fuel pipes, also dislodged a rubber pipe allowing sea water to leak into the vessel. It had to be pumped out by the fire brigade.

Dennis Tunstall, the boat's owner, took the judge and the engineers Joseph Pire and Co to the Admiralty Court in London. Yesterday Mr Justice Clarke said the damage was caused by negligence and that a district judge was responsible for the acts or defaults of a bailiff.

Mr Tunstall was awarded £9,000 and most of the costs, estimated at a total of £30,000. However, the district judge was spared from having to find his share of the money — Mr Justice Clarke ordered that the engineers should indemnify him.

The damages were to cover the drop in the vessel's value. Mr Tunstall had asked for £28,500.

Appeal over racial slip dismissed as fanciful

By MICHAEL HORSNELL

A JUDGE who used the phrase "nigger in the woodpile" during a case in which a man of mixed race sought damages from the police has been cleared of racial bias by the Court of Appeal.

The comment was made in 1994 by Judge Bernstein during summing up at Liverpool County Court in the case of Valentine Reid, who was seeking £50,000 from Merseyside Police for alleged malicious prosecution.

Judge Bernstein, 64, was referring to white police officers when she made the remark. After losing his action, Mr Reid appealed on the basis that, even though the judge immediately apologised, "she should have stopped the case upon realising the offending phrase."

Peter Herbert, of the Society of Black Lawyers, said in the appeal court that the judge had displayed racial bias even if it was unintentional.

Lord Justice Waite, sitting with Lords Justices Beldam and Morritt, said that while it was right to highlight the risk of prejudice in racially sensitive times, it was "fanciful" to suggest that any jury would have been influenced by the remark. Mr Reid's appeal was dismissed.

Eat out for a fiver

DINING OUT is always a pleasure, but with The Times Eat Out For £5 offer, starting on Monday, February 12, it is also easily affordable. To apply, cut out the vouchers which are appearing daily in The Times until Saturday, February 17. Each voucher entitles you and up to five companions to dine at more than 400 participating restaurants featured in our guide. (If you missed Monday's paper, you can order a guide by sending two first class stamps to: The Times Eat Out For £5 offer, PO Box 481, London E1 9BD.) All reservations and inquiries should be made by phone to the restaurant and you must mention The Times offer when you make your booking. Corrections: the number of the Millstream Hotel and restaurant, Bosham Lane, Bosham, Sussex, is 01243 573234 and not as stated on page 19 of the guide. Note that the Millstream is not the same as the Bosham Hotel and Restaurant.

THE TIMES

Eat out for £5

VOUCHER

This voucher entitles the bearer and up to five guests to a one, two or three course meal for £5 each at any one of the participating restaurants in The Times Eat out for £5 guide.

CONDITIONS OF USE

Reservations must be made in advance and the voucher presented on arrival. The offer applies to the Eat out for £5 menu only at applicable sittings for up to six people. One, two or three courses apply as specified in the guide. Where less than three courses are offered, starters and desserts can be selected from the main menu and the appropriate price must be paid. This offer applies to food only — drinks must be purchased separately. Where no drinks are purchased, restaurants may charge a discretionary £2 per person cover charge. The offer is valid from February 12 until March 31, 1996. Refer to the guide for full details, days available and whether lunch or dinner is being offered.

*PLUS DEPOSIT AND FINAL PAYMENT.

A NEW ROVER 100 KENSINGTON.
FROM £79* A MONTH WITH FREE INSURANCE*
IT'S GOT TO BE WORTH A SECOND LOOK.

What's this?

It rather looks like a young policeman's fancy is turning towards a new Rover 100 Kensington.

And what does he find?

Luxury wheel trims, tinted glass, stereo radio/cassette, 5-speed box and if we're not much mistaken, a rather fashionable Windsor interior trim.

But as it comes with a year's free insurance,* an engine immobiliser and a remote controlled alarm, she won't be needing us for an escort.

Also to be seen around town is the Kensington S.E., with tinted sunroof and remote central locking into the bargain.

They're both available in pearlescent Nightfire Red and White Diamond. Or in this case, metallic Kingfisher Blue.

Matches her eyes.

The figure's quite attractive too.

It starts at just £79* a month.

Sigh... I think I'm in love.

CASH PRICE*	£14,715.00
DEPOSIT (40%)	£5,886.00
AMOUNT OF CREDIT	£8,829.00
IN MONTHLY REPAYMENTS	£279.00
GUARANTEED MINIMUM FUTURE VALUE*	£1,308.00
CHARGE FOR CREDIT	£1,272.00
TOTAL PAYABLE	£8,541.00

APR 14.8%

AN ADVANTAGE RATE OF 14.8% AND A TRAILER AGENCY FEE OF £115 ARE ADDED TO THE TOTAL PAYABLE. *PROVIDED THAT THE VEHICLE HAS NOT EXCEEDED THE AGREED MILEAGE LIMITS. SEVERAL OTHER FACTORS MAY AFFECT THE TOTAL PAYABLE. THE EXACT FIGURE WILL BE PROVIDED BY THE FINANCIAL INSTITUTION.

For a free test drive or a brochure phone now on 0345 186 186

ABOVE ALL, IT'S A ROVER

CAR SHOWN: ROVER 100 KENSINGTON 3 DOOR, 14715 PRICE CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS. INCLUDES (EXCLUDING COST OF NUMBER PLATE, DELIVERY TO DEALER AND 6 MONTH ROAD TAX. SUBJECT TO AVAILABILITY. *FREE INSURANCE OFFER AVAILABLE TO ANYONE AGED 21 OR OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS. CARS MUST BE PURCHASED BEFORE 31ST MAY 1996. CREDIT AVAILABLE TO ANYONE AGED 18 OR OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS (A GUARANTEE MAY BE REQUIRED). THROUGH ROVER FINANCE LTD, AVON HOUSE, 415 STRATFORD ROAD, BIRMINGHAM, B4 6JL. A MEMBER OF NATWEST GROUP. WRITTEN QUOTATIONS AVAILABLE ON REQUEST.

DRIVING RAIN

DRIVING WIND

DRIVING SNOW

The new Mercedes E-class. It's equipped for all driving conditions.

There are elements inside the new Mercedes E-class that will help you cope with the elements outside.

We've developed ETS, a new electronic traction system. It means you can drive on surfaces as different as ice and tarmac safely and simultaneously, with no loss of traction.

We have developed an optional rain sensitive windscreen wiper. A sensor adjusts the speed of the wiper automatically to the amount of rain falling. The harder it rains, the faster it works.

We've redesigned the headlights. They are not, however, just a different shape.

They are more powerful, better directed and have a longer beam.

We've improved the aerodynamics, too. The new E-class is the most streamlined production saloon ever built. It holds the road much better in high winds and is also quieter at high speeds.

In short, it's whatever the weather has in store for you.

The new Mercedes E-class will help you cope with whatever the weather has in store for you.

Mercedes-Benz. The new E-class. It's equipped for all driving conditions.

THE NEW MERCEDES E-CLASS FROM £23,500. CAR SHOWN E-CLASS ELEGANCE FROM £26,000. EXCLUDES DELIVERY (£425 UK MAINLAND) AND NUMBER PLATES. PRICES CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS. FOR MORE INFORMATION PHONE 0181-515 0088 EXT 100. WWW.MERCEDES-BENZ.CO.UK. MERCEDES-BENZ MEMBER OF THE DAIMLER-BENZ GROUP.

Motiveless leaves twin struggling

Why a healthy language has to sometimes break the rules

Mercedes
WINNERS £140
0118 920 3223 NOW
0345 123111
House Hammond

A year ago a woman had her throat slashed on a country road. Today her killer is still at large

Motiveless murder leaves twin sister struggling to cope

By PAUL WILKINSON

THE past few days have been hard for Elsie Wilson, a slight, silver-haired Yorkshire farmer's wife. She has been gathering her courage to face the anniversary this weekend of the savage and motiveless murder of her twin sister.

A year ago on Friday Margaret Wilson was attacked as she walked home from her daughter's house to the family farm on the edge of the Yorkshire Wolds village of Burton Fleming. Two men working in a field saw a motorist stop his car and jog several hundred yards back to slash her throat and leave her dying on the roadside with a gaping wound.

The attack stunned the close-knit rural community, where murder is viewed as the stuff of TV and the distant big cities. Edwin Wilson, Margaret's husband, and their son Alan were working only hundreds of yards away and were among the first on the scene. They know that the motiveless nature of the killing means finding the murderer is well nigh impossible.

Margaret Wilson: her killer left few clues

A year on, despite widespread publicity, police admit they face an uphill struggle. The 6ft attacker, aged about 30 with collar-length dark hair, vanished, leaving almost no clues. Even the unusual murder weapon, a stubby blunted knife, designed for shoe-making, has failed to provide a conclusive lead.

Elsie Wilson lives less than 400 yards from the murder scene. "I see it every day, but you just have to get on with life, you push thinking about it out of your head," she said. She has lived all her 67 years within five miles of the family home and cannot countenance moving.

Mrs Wilson and Alan, her nephew, agreed to a police request to break their year-long silence and speak to the media in an attempt to find new clues. As Mrs Wilson offered journalists traditional hospitality — home-made fruit

Margaret, left, and Elsie Wilson at their joint wedding in 1948 to two local brothers, and as Girl Guides. The twins had always been close cake and tea — she said: "People have asked me if, as a twin, I had felt some premonition of Margaret's death, but no, I knew nothing. I had been in the hairdressers when my husband told me. I could not believe it. I do miss her."

The sisters were close. They grew up together on the Wolds, both joining the Brownies and Guides and falling in love with two local brothers. They had a joint wedding in 1948 and honeymooned together in the Lake District. They were pregnant at the same time twice. They would often joke about choosing the same greetings cards for relatives.

Alan Wilson still finds it difficult to accept the death. "I come in expecting her to be there, or think of something I must tell her. She was simply the best mother in the world."

He and his aunt are convinced someone is sheltering the killer. "A wife or girlfriend must be aware that something was wrong that day," he said. "They should come forward now. If he is as unhinged as we think he must be, he could do it again and they could be the next victim."

Detectives have traced 3,000 white Montego estates similar to the killer's and taken 5,000 statements. The offer of a £15,000 reward by Humberside Police and Crimestoppers has had no effect.

Detective Superintendent Tony Corrigan, leading the investigation, said the killing remained an enigma, but added: "I am convinced there are still people holding information which might help us."

No end in sight to the grief: Alan and Elsie Wilson

REITH LECTURE

Why a healthy language has to sometimes break the rules

By TUNKU VARADARAJAN

IS OUR language sick? Jean Aitchison asked last night, with a clear flavour of rhetoric. Professor Aitchison, who holds the Rupert Murdoch chair of Language and Communication at Oxford University, sought to answer her own question in the first of five Reith Lectures — entitled The Language Web — on Radio 4.

The professor, a linguist, believes that English, far from being sick, is in rude good health. Last night's lecture, playing on her theme of a language-web, focused on a "web of worries" — trivial anxieties about the state of our language.

Professor Aitchison asserted that English changes constantly, and that such transformation "is a fact of life". Even Chaucer, in the 14th century, noted that "in forme of speche is chaunge", and she believes that the same is true today. But such change, she argued, must not be confused with decay — an argument the professor has made at greater length in her elegant book Language Change: Progress or Decay?, first published in 1991.

British English, she said, is not changing for the worse. On the contrary, the Reith lecturer may have come tantalisingly close to arguing that English is changing for the better. She did not say so explicitly, of course, but she did refer with approval to the modern-day loosening of some of the language's "artificial rules".

These pseudo-rules she dates, in many cases, to the 19th century. "Around 1700, the seemingly fixed grammar of Latin aroused great admiration, at a time when English itself was in a fairly fluid state," she said.

Professor Aitchison even cited a letter to the Lord

Treasurer from Jonathan Swift, urging the formation of an academy to regulate language usage — comparable, one assumes, to the modern Académie Française.

Swift believed, as did Robert Lowth, an 18th-century Bishop of London, that Latin usages would fertilise a "correct English". Professor Aitchison gave listeners a few examples of these "artificially imposed rules". The apparent prohibition of "different to" she described as "a misguided attempt to make English behave more like Latin". She has often mounted the same defence in favour of split infinitives.

Furthermore, she asserted that it is only due to "an old and illogical belief that logic should govern language" that English has a ban on the double negative. "This is odd," Professor Aitchison declared, "because in most languages of the world, the more negatives, the stronger the negation". The central message of last night's lecture was that we need to understand language, not try to control it. When new forms flood in and wipe away older usages, the process should not be likened to "disintegration".

"Sweeping up old oddments is good housekeeping," Professor Aitchison pointed out, in the accessible manner that is her trademark. In her second Reith Lecture next Tuesday, the professor will lecture on the origin of language in the human species. "Crucial to its development," she said intriguingly last night, "were two loosely woven webs, a web of deceit and a web of friendship."

□ Professor Aitchison's Reith Lectures will be broadcast for the next four Tuesdays at 8.30pm on BBC Radio 4.

Aitchison: defended flexible English

PC PRICE MADNESS

The Price you see is the Price you Pay!

ALL PRICES INCLUDE VAT

ESCOM 486 DX2/66

- 486 DX2/66MHz Processor ■ 540Mb Hard Disk Drive
- 4Mb RAM ■ 3.5" Floppy Disk Drive ■ 1Mb Graphic Card
- 14" NI Monitor ■ Mini Tower Case ■ Keyboard ■ 12 Months

On-site Warranty ■ 12 Months Telephone Support

£599.99 INC. VAT

ESCOM 486 DX4/100 with 540Mb Hard Disk Drive	£649.99 inc. VAT
Commodore P60 including software	£849.99 inc. VAT
ESCOM P75 PCI with 1Gb Hard Disk Drive	£899.99 inc. VAT
ESCOM P100 PCI with 1Gb Hard Disk Drive	£999.99 inc. VAT
ESCOM P120 PCI with 1Gb Hard Disk Drive	£1099.99 inc. VAT
ESCOM P133 PCI with 1Gb Hard Disk Drive	£1199.99 inc. VAT
ESCOM DX4/100 Notebook with 850Mb Hard Disk Drive	£1399.99 inc. VAT
Siemens Nixdorf Scenic PS101	£1399.99 inc. VAT
Siemens Nixdorf Scenic PD101	£1449.99 inc. VAT
Siemens Nixdorf Scenic PT101	£1499.99 inc. VAT

ACCESSORIES
Commodore Colour Inkjet iP3300 Printer	£199.99 inc. VAT
Hayes Internet ready 28.8 External Modem	£179.99 inc. VAT
Commodore Soundcard	£39.99 inc. VAT
Commodore Quad Speed CD ROM	£89.99 inc. VAT
Commodore Quad Speed & Soundcard Multimedia Kit	£149.99 inc. VAT
Commodore 120 watt Speakers	£39.99 inc. VAT
Commodore MPEG Video Card	£119.99 inc. VAT
Commodore TapeStreamer 3.0Gb	£219.99 inc. VAT
Commodore TapeStreamer 3.2Gb	£219.99 inc. VAT
Commodore 1.2Gb Hard Disk Drive	£149.99 inc. VAT

HUNDREDS MORE CRAZY DEALS IN-STORE!

OVER 200 STORES NATIONWIDE

FOR DETAILS OF YOUR NEAREST STORE PHONE

0990 100888

OPEN MONDAY-FRIDAY 9.30am-6.00pm THURSDAY 9.30am-8.00pm

SATURDAY 9.00am-5.30pm SUNDAY 10.00am-4.00pm

OFFICE WORLD OPENING HOURS

MONDAY - FRIDAY 8.00am-8.00pm

SATURDAY 9.00am-6.00pm SUNDAY 10.30am-4.30pm

OPENING TIMES MAY VARY FROM STORE TO STORE. CHECK LATE NIGHT OPENING TIMES WITH YOUR LOCAL STORE

FINANCE AVAILABLE CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED

ALL PRODUCTS CARRY FULL WARRANTY

TAKE IT AWAY ON THE DAY YOU BUY

FREE DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

FREE NEXT DAY DELIVERY

easyware FROM ESCOM

A UNIQUE PACKAGE THAT OFFERS YOU TOP QUALITY HARDWARE AND SOFTWARE PLUS THE KIND OF PERSONAL HELP AND ADVICE THAT MAKES CHOOSING THE RIGHT PC EASY. ALL BACKED BY A FULL SUPPORT SERVICE AND ON-SITE WARRANTIES

THE EASY WAY TO CHOOSE A PC

ESCOM UK LIMITED 3 RIVERSIDE WAY, RIVERSIDE BUSINESS PARK, IRVINE KA11 5DJ

TEL: 01294 222600 FAX: 01294 223200 Registered in Scotland Reg No. 137446

Choice of operating systems available for a small additional charge. Windows 95 or OS/2 Warp. If purchased, is pre-installed on systems. Other applications supplied on CD. Manuals are available for an additional charge. Prices valid from 1st February 1996.

The Intel Inside logo and Pentium Processor logo are registered trademarks of Intel Corporation. Prices and details are correct at time of going to press. Offers are subject to availability and specifications changes without notice. Extended warranties and credit facilities available subject to terms on selected systems only. All ESCOM systems come with 12 months' warranty. Written quotations available from First Social Finance Ltd., PO Box 207, Chapel Lane, Leeds LS1 9BE. 24/7. All products may not be available in all stores.

Mercedes OWNERS COMPREHENSIVE INSURANCE FROM £140

Quality Rewarded by Low Insurance

Exclusive Schemes for Mercedes

Tel: 0115 920 3220 NOW!

or Phone your Nearest Branch at the Local Rate on 0345 123111

Hill House Hammond Over 250 Branches Nationwide

Mackay: field day for the lawyers

Tories warn of collision course for Scots parliament

By Philip Webster
Political Editor

A TAX-RAISING Scottish parliament could soon be in a permanent confrontation with Westminster, the Lord Chancellor says today as the political parties prepare for a fresh battle on constitutional reform.

Tony Blair, delivering the John Smith memorial lecture in London tonight, will outline Labour's plans for Scottish and Welsh devolution, reform of the House of Lords, freedom of information and a Bill of Rights. He will also call for a "stakeholder democracy", arguing that the Tory defence of the status quo will fuel public dissatisfaction with politics.

At the same time Brian Mawhinney, the Tory party chairman, will launch a pre-emptive strike against Mr Blair's proposals for a Scottish parliament, claiming that they are a direct threat to the survival of the United Kingdom because they would put the parliament on a collision course with Westminster. In a foretaste of the campaign the Tories intend to run against the "tartan tax", Mr Mawhinney will question why Labour MPs sitting for Scottish seats but paid in London should be exempt from a tax they wish to impose on their constituents.

Writing in The Times today, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Mackay of Clashfern, makes a rare foray into the constitutional debate, saying that giving Scotland tax-raising powers could lead to a "field day for the lawyers". He questions why tax-raising powers should be given if politicians are arguing that they may not be needed. To increase taxes uniquely in Scotland would be bad for Scotland. But in the unlikely event of the powers being used to lower taxes, profound constitutional as well as economic issues would arise. How long would English MPs continue to vote more money to Scotland than to their own constituents, only to see it used to fund tax cuts north of the border.

He adds: "A tax-raising Scottish parliament would soon be in permanent confrontation with Westminster. Break up of the United Kingdom would then be but a step away."

The Labour leader, however, will use his speech to go on the offensive, trying, his aides said, to change constitutional reform from a chattering classes issue into a radical populist vote-winner. He will challenge the Government to say whether it thinks that the constitution works well. He will say that "power to the people is not a slogan but a necessity if we are to reconnect politics with the people. Mr Mawhinney will make plain that the constitution is the next front in the anti-Labour offensive. He will argue that representative government, the rule of law, and personal liberty — among the Union's historic achievements — are threatened by Labour's plans. He will repeat claims that a Scottish parliament would have a "tartan price tag" of 3p on income tax.

Lord Mackay, page 18

Give the poor a sporting chance, peers demand

By Alice Thomson, Political Reporter

PEERS from all sides of the House queued up yesterday to denounce the Government over its plans for television sports coverage.

They were speaking on the first amendment of the Broadcasting Bill, which would deny subscription channels exclusive rights to broadcast eight major sporting events. Most emphasised that it was vital to keep the main sports events available on mainstream television because only 15 per cent of viewers had satellite or cable television.

Several peers aimed their criticism at Rupert Murdoch, chairman and chief executive of The News Corporation, parent company of News International, BSkyB satellite TV service is 40 per cent owned by News International, which owns The Times.

Lord Howell, a former Labour Sports Minister, was one of the sponsors of the amendment. He told the Lords that they were fighting for the "ethic and spirit" of sport as well as the economics and financing of major events.

"I have a profound belief in the social purpose of sport. In essence the social purpose of sport is best expressed through its spirit, commonly known as sportsmanship. These precepts are being increasingly undermined by the total domination within sport of financial considerations above all others."

Lord Howell said that the Bill ignored up to 40 million people who could not get or could not afford Sky television. "They ignore the elderly and the infirm, who now apparently can be sacrificed in the interests of one man — Mr Rupert Murdoch," he said.

He warned sporting companies not to become too enamoured by lucrative deals with BSkyB. "Anybody who wants to get into bed with Mr Murdoch never gets out of bed the same man," he said.

Lord Peyton of Yeovil, a former Tory minister, admitted there were detailed problems with the amendment but said that peers should support it as "a nudge to the Government to produce something better to cope with some really difficult problems."

He warned the Government: "There are many millions of the public who would find themselves very unhappy at being denied access to what are major national events simply because they could not afford the gadgetry necessary."

Lord Peyton described Mr Murdoch as "a man who owes this country no allegiance and who doesn't seem to be overwhelmed by admiration for its institutions or its way of doing things". He added: "I doubt whether there is any other country in the world which would have allowed a man who was a non-national to acquire quite the degree of immense power and influence which Mr Murdoch has, by his very great ability, achieved by himself."

But he was immediately criticised by the crossbencher Lord Wyatt of Westbury, who accused Lord Peyton of being "xenophobic" and disagreed with the amendment. "It is a concerted attack on one man because he has been more successful than others. The one thing people in this country don't like is people who have been successful," he said. Lord Wyatt said that the BBC had never bothered to show the whole of the Ryder Cup when it had been the broadcast, but BSkyB could. He said that the elderly and the young could watch sport for free in pubs that had satellite television. "The BBC forces the elderly and infirm to buy a TV licence," he said.

He said that the horse racing industry had been badly hit by the National Lottery. "Racing really deserves to get as much money back in as it can. I don't think it's impossible or wrong for anything racing owns to be sold to the highest bidder."

The former Commons Speaker Lord Weatherill, leader of the crossbenches, supported the amendment. "In recent days I have lost count of the number of people who have said to me: 'What are you going to do about this so-called crown jewels of sport Bill?'"

The former Home Secretary Viscount Whitelaw was one of only four out of 16 peers who spoke for the Government. He appealed to them to give the Government more time over the issue and leave the final decision to the Commons. "It is important to try and get it right. I don't think that would be by this measure at this time," he said.

Howell: Bill ignores 40 million viewers

Weatherill: protecting 'crown jewels' of sport

Clarke is struggling to reconcile pressures from conflicting camps

Kenneth Clarke yesterday tried to satisfy two contrasting audiences: voters worried about the welfare state and Tory MPs and activists keen for cuts in public spending. He was only partly successful, and so may satisfy neither.

Politics is, of course, about reconciling conflicting aims. In the short-term, an adroit Chancellor can fulfil the desire of people both for better public services and cuts in taxation. But, in the long-term, the pressures cannot so easily be reconciled.

In his London School of Economics lecture yesterday, Mr Clarke made a convincing case for gradualism. He hardly needed to cite the riots in Paris before Christmas against social security changes as a warning against sudden reforms. Calls by the unthinking Right for cuts of £10 billion or more at a stroke are nonsense. Of course, there is always scope to eliminate waste but this can never be more than a partial contributor to cuts in overall spending. Long-standing commitments cannot be torn up suddenly. There is no alternative to the piecemeal approach of Peter Lilley in limiting future commitments. Over time, these can produce sizeable savings.

Mr Clarke argued that as a result of these and other changes the real growth of public spending has been limited to 1 per cent a year, compared with 1½ per cent a year during the 1980s. Despite the recession — and big increases in spending before the 1992 election (though he did not mention these) — the peak level of expenditure of 43½ per cent of national income in the 1990s was two points less than a decade earlier and nearly four points less than in the mid-1970s. Moreover, spending is forecast to fall to 40 per cent within two years. And, Mr Clarke diplomatically added, he and the Prime Minister "have both said we will then aspire to reduce it further". As long as the economy continues to grow and spending is held down in real terms, there are no limits as to how much the share can be reduced — though, unlike John Major, he did not refer to a 35 per cent figure.

The absence of such a specific long-term target, or even aspiration, will not satisfy the Tory Right, but it is the limit of prudence as long as the Government claims, in Mr Clarke's words, to be developing "a strong welfare state". He made a powerful case for free health and education services and a safety net for old age paid for out of general taxation as an important reassurance for people at a time of rapid economic change, complementing more flexible markets by reducing fear of change and opposition to it.

But there are long-term tensions between these commitments and overall spending restraint. Much can be done through structural changes to improve efficiency. But these savings are not sufficient to finance technological improvements and to meet the ever-rising demand for better services. Current plans for spending to remain more or less constant in real terms imply a continuing squeeze in the real pay of public sector workers and cuts in many popular programmes. These cannot be sustained indefinitely. This is not an argument for a big rise in total spending, but rather a recognition that it can only be held down, let alone cut in real terms, if more provision is financed by the private sector.

There is no reason why the public sector should remain the sole, or even predominant, supplier of some services which people clearly want. This is already occurring in pensions, as Mr Lilley will point out today, but it needs to happen elsewhere. Otherwise, despite Mr Clarke's best efforts, repeated squeezes on spending will merely result in more public complaints about inadequate services, with little reduction in the burden of expenditure or taxes.

PETER RIDDELL

MPs back curb on explicit teenage magazines

By James Landale
Political Reporter

A TORY backbench move aimed at curbing the sale to young children of sexually explicit teenage girls' magazines cleared its first Commons hurdle yesterday.

The Periodicals (Protection of Children) Bill would require magazines to carry coverage warnings about articles that may be unsuitable for readers below a certain age. Peter Luff, Tory MP for Worcester, introduced the Bill after reading magazines bought by his 10-year-old daughter.

He said yesterday: "These magazines undermine the value and importance of sex. I want to help parents and schools by making it easier to learn what is inside. I want editors and publishers to decide what their lowest target age is for each magazine, and say so on the front cover."

Most ten-minute rule Bills are used to publicise an issue and rarely have any chance of becoming law. But Mr Luff's Bill, given its first reading without a vote yesterday, has widespread support.

Some retailers recently banned a magazine for children aged 10 to 17 because it offered explicit advice on performing oral sex. Mr Luff told MPs that the letters pages in magazines such as Sugar, Mix, It's Bliss, 16, and More! often degenerated into "squalid titillation", "salaciousness" and "smut". He acknowledged that the magazines "sometimes gave sensible advice but said that the language used was of a kind more usually seen on the walls of public lavatories."

Simon Hughes (Barnet, Southwark and Westminster) said that the Commons had to proceed carefully. "We must not end up with an age marking that makes these magazines 'more appealing' rather than less appealing."

Tory sources said that if the Bill did not succeed the Government might consider introducing a code of practice.

Leading article, page 19

IN PARLIAMENT

YESTERDAY in the Commons questions to defence ministers and the Prime Minister and a statement on British Gas followed by debates on future of GP fundholders, Collective Redundancies and Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) (Amendment), Regulations proposed closure of Frames Withers Home, Sutton Coldfield, in the Lords the Broadcasting Bill, committee stage, health and safety in farming.

TODAY in the Commons: backbench debate followed by Foreign Office statement on Labour's decision on no proliferation and the "renewed threat of terrorism", and backbench debate on pensions, welfare, fire, and law. In the Lords: debate on employment in financial services, industrial overseas aid, Community Representation Bill, second reading.

Commons to vote on pay in July

By Philip Webster

MPs will face a key vote in July on whether to accept an independent review that is almost certain to recommend a big increase in their pay before the general election.

The Government has asked the Senior Salaries Review Body to conduct a comprehensive investigation into the pay, allowances and pensions of MPs and ministers, calling for recommendations if possible by the end of June. The body is expected to recommend a new mechanism for determining the annual uprating of MPs' pay without the need for a parliamentary decision.

MPs want to avoid what has become an annual embarrassment over their pay. The senior Labour backbencher Alf Morris, a sponsor of the Commons motion that has led to the inquiry, welcomed the decision to hold an independent review. He said: "Nobody I know has asked for a publishing of MPs' pay. What the motion did and what unites us all is to make it clear that MPs' pay should no longer be decided by MPs themselves — an unwholesome, invidious and wrong system. We are now very glad it has gone for independent adjudication."

Yesterday's move follows talks between the party leadership over the past few days. Both wanted to defuse the issue after protests from poverty groups. However, the June target date is regarded as highly important. Labour want the issue well out of the way before a general election that it expects to win.

Harman has little impact

By Peter Riddell

THE Harriet Harman row has hardly dented Labour's support, according to the latest ICM poll for The Guardian.

Half the public, including a half of Labour supporters, think that Ms Harman was right to send her son to a selective grammar school, despite Labour's opposition to selective education. This may explain why the affair has had so little impact on Labour's standing.

The poll, undertaken between February 2 and 4, shows that Labour support has only declined by one point since early January to 47 per cent, according to ICM's adjustment of the figures. The Labour lead has narrowed from 22 to 16 points because support for the Tories has risen from 26 to 31 per cent over the month. This is in line with other evidence suggesting that the Government's rating is beginning to pick up.

The Tories' gain was largely at the expense of the Liberal Democrats, whose support slipped from 23 to 19 per cent. These changes reflect a comparison with the immediate aftermath of Emma Nicholson's defection.

WITH OUR LATEST NOTEBOOK YOU GET TO SEE THE BIGGER PICTURE

Working with multiple windows? Making full screen presentations? Feast your eyes on the CF-41 Mark III and its giant 12.1" screen. More screen space means less scrolling and more room for spreadsheets. Add crisp SVGA resolution and a non-glare screen finish and you'll see why our latest notebook deserves a closer look.

For the full picture on the CF-41 Mark III series, call us free on 0500 40 40 41 anytime.

Panasonic
CF-41 Notebook series

Indian wo state join to outlaw

Chalker tells King to allow democr

free PEN when you

0800 282 401

Indian women and state join forces to outlaw alcohol

FROM CHRISTOPHER THOMAS IN DELHI

THE north Indian state of Haryana has announced that all rural liquor stores must close permanently by April 1. The decision marks another attempt by politicians to control the nation's appetite for alcohol.

The ban is a victory for women, who rose in anger because so many of their husbands were spending their meagre wages on alcohol at small government-run shops. Not that the ban will work, of course, as in other states that have introduced prohibition, it will simply create a bootlegging industry and drive up prices.

Andhra Pradesh, the big southern state where women launched an unprecedented campaign against the shops, has been experimenting with prohibition for a year. Women shaved the heads of drunken men after they passed out and they refused to cook or wash the clothes of persistently drunken husbands. They even went on sex strikes.

The result is that politicians moved into the illegal distilleries racket, enriching themselves while paying lip-service to the evils of drink. Gujarat, the home state of Mahatma Gandhi in western India, has had prohibition for years, in deference to the anti-alcohol sentiments of the father of the nation, but the ban is a farce. Drink is readily available, albeit at high prices, from bootleggers. Bitter stills are common in the countryside.

Every political party in Haryana, a farming state, has been forced to support prohibition because the anti-drink movement, backed by Hindu religious organisations, has gained such momentum. As in Andhra Pradesh, women attacked liquor shops and delivered vehicles to stop sales of drink in their villages.

Members of the Bharatiya Janata Party, a Hindu nationalist political group, plan to enter the homes of Dalits (Untouchables) and low-caste people in Haryana in search of alcohol bottles that will be smashed in a public demonstration. Similar gimmicks were employed by Hindu organisations when Andhra Pradesh officially went dry.

Tipplers in Andhra Pradesh complain that black-market whiskey is triple the price of pre-prohibition days. Even the cost of the local toddy, arrack, has soared. The price of imported whiskey would seem huge in rural India. A standard bottle costs about 900 rupees (£16.60), which is more than most people earn in a month.

The distilling of arrack has become a cottage industry in rural Andhra Pradesh, with entire families engaged in the trade. Local toddy tappers, who extract the principal ingredient for arrack from palm trees, are in greater demand now that whiskey is so expensive on the black market. Arrack is often laced with chemicals to give it extra kick, sometimes with fatal results.

Fines for possession of alcohol are high. Houses can be raided without a warrant, government officials can be dismissed if caught drinking and repeat offenders risk jail. For the most part, people simply bribe the police.

One well-off man caught with three bottles of premium whiskey said that he had had to pay more than £2,000 to get the case dropped.

Plundered treasure returns to Greece

FROM JOHN CARR IN ATHENS

A SET of ancient Greek jewellery, possibly Europe's oldest, has been returned to Greece two years after the Government in Athens proved that an American art gallery was exhibiting them illegally.

The 312 pieces, mainly gold-en rings, earrings, beads and bracelets, had been looted from an ancient grave site in southern Greece 19 years ago, officials of the Greek Culture Ministry said. After a bit of detective work, involving the perusal of a catalogue of New York's Michael Ward Gallery, Katerina Dimakopoulou, a senior ministry archaeologist, flew to America in March 1993 to verify her suspicions.

After eight months of legal fighting the Greek Government proved to an American court that the jewellery had been looted. The set was re-housed in the National Archaeological Museum of Athens this week.

Mrs Dimakopoulou cited a Unesco convention of 1970

The returned jewellery, including a signet ring, right, goes on display in Greece which requires a claimant to prove that allegedly stolen antiquities came from a specific area. In this case, it was a group of 15th century BC graves at Aidonia in the Peloponnese, the site of the Mycenaean Greek civilisation which fought the Trojan War.

The jewellery has been dated to 1,000 years before Pericles and the flourishing of classical Greek civilisation. When archaeologists first dug into the Aidonia graves in 1975, they found evidence of recent looting.

From then on, Greek embassies and consulates around the world had been told to keep their eyes open for the stolen antiquities.

Nicoletta Valakou, an archaeologist, said. The Greek Government has said that it cannot afford adequate protection for the thousands of sites containing ancient relics around the country, many of which are unguarded. "Antiquity smuggling is a scourge for us," Mrs Valakou said.

Chalker tells king to allow democracy

FROM RAY KENNEDY IN JOHANNESBURG

A HINT by Britain to the tiny African kingdom of Swaziland that the time has arrived to come to terms with democracy or face the economic consequences was spurned yesterday when police arrested a leading trade union official.

Baroness Chalker of Wallasey, the Minister of Overseas Development, urged King Mswati III and his Government ministers not to be slow in introducing changes. Her visit on Monday to Mbabane, the capital, came after an eight-day general strike last month that crippled the country. Swaziland, landlocked between South Africa and Mozambique, is ruled by an absolute monarchy.

After his talks with Lady Chalker, King Mswati announced that he would revive the suspended constitution and elections on the type of political system the people wanted. But last night, as the king's announcements were rejected by the country's largest underground political party, the People's United Democratic Movement, police in Mbabane arrested Jabulani Ntshale, assistant general secretary of the Swaziland Federation of Trade Unions on perjury and forgery charges dating back to 1984.

The federation has called for a second general strike from February 20. But a union official in Mbabane said he feared that the country was heading for bloodshed and violence.

Mswati: monarch in troubled kingdom

BRITISH GAS PROPOSALS TO CREATE TWO SEPARATE COMPANIES IN 1997

WHY THE CHANGE?

The gas market is changing rapidly. The creation of two separate and independent listed companies will have clear benefits in the managing of our businesses more effectively, to the advantage of customers, shareholders and employees.

One company will focus on the supply of gas and related services in Britain. The other will continue to be Britain's single national transporter of gas and also develop the international gas business.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN FOR EMPLOYEES?

Employees will benefit from the better long-term prospects for both these separate companies.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN FOR CUSTOMERS?

We are dedicated to the continuous improvement of our service to customers. Single-minded attention to the needs of customers will speed the restoration of high standards of service. Above all a safe, reliable and secure gas transportation system will continue to be maintained.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN FOR SHAREHOLDERS?

There is a great deal of work to be done. It is unlikely to be before the Spring of 1997 that a decision to proceed can be taken and formal proposals put to shareholders. Full details will be made available at that time and there is no need for any action at the moment. For more background ring the Shareholder line on 0345 003 006 which operates at the local call rate.

RENEWING YOUR HOME CONTENTS INSURANCE?

free
PEN
when you

PHONE FOR A QUOTE

Give us a call today and we'll send you a quote for the home contents policy where you decide how much cover you need. There's no obligation, and we'll also give you a classically styled ballpoint pen, with our compliments.

Legal & General

call free
0800 282 404

PLEASE QUOTE CODE 004073-3P WHEN YOU PHONE
Home Contents cover is only available in England, Scotland and Wales and is subject to acceptance by underwriters.

British Gas

Forbes's fortune leaves campaign rivals trailing

FROM MARTIN FLETCHER IN WASHINGTON

AS Louisiana Republicans prepared to cast the first votes of America's 1996 presidential election last night, new figures revealed the breathtaking sums Steve Forbes is spending on his maverick bid for the White House.

In 1995 the publishing heir spent $18 million (£11.5 million). Robert Dole $20 million and Phil Gramm $19 million — but then Mr Forbes did not enter the race until September. In the last three months of 1995, Mr Forbes spent $14 million compared with Mr Dole's $8.4 million, Mr Gramm's $5.4 million, Lamar Alexander's $3.5 million and Patrick Buchanan's $3.2 million.

Since the beginning of the year, Mr Forbes's spending has actually accelerated and his total outlay must now exceed $20 million. That is a staggering amount considering actual voting is only just beginning, but one that has propelled him into second place in most polls.

Moreover, these figures from the Federal Election Commission understate the huge advantages Mr Forbes enjoys as a result of using a personal fortune of roughly $440 million to finance his campaign.

Firstly, he has been able to drown out his Republican rivals' messages. Nearly $10 million of his $14 million expenditure in the last quarter was on advertising, while a lot of his rivals' was on fundraising. He has spent four times more on commercials in Iowa, scene of next week's caucuses, than any other candidate. The average voter in New Hampshire, which holds the first primaries on February 20, now sees Forbes advertisements 34 times a week.

Secondly, Mr Forbes's spending has forced his rivals to dig deeper into their war chests to remain competitive. This virtually ensures the swift departure of all candidates who finish outside the top three in Iowa and New Hampshire.

However, Mr Forbes is not bound by any spending limits as he is not receiving taxpayer funds, and he promises to remain in the race right up to the Republican nominating convention in August. He says he will "invest and spend whatever it takes to get my message of hope, growth and opportunity across to the voters" and could surpass the record of $60 million which Ross Perot spent on his independent candidacy in 1992.

Mr Forbes's rivals accuse him of trying to "buy" the Republican nomination, but voters seem unconcerned. Many consider his wealth makes him incorruptible and beyond the reach of lobbyists.

Mr Forbes also argues that all his spending would be futile if he did not have a powerful message. In 1980, John Connally, the former Texas Governor, spent $12 million chasing the Republican nomination but won not a single primary. Mr Gramm, the Texas senator, has spent more than $20 million but remains stuck in single figures in the polls.

Mr Gramm had to win last night's Louisiana caucuses to maintain his credibility, but faced a strong challenge from Mr Buchanan, the conservative commentator. All other candidates besides Alan Keyes boycotted the caucuses to appease Iowa voters furious that Louisiana has violated their right to hold the first contest.

Mr Gramm had worked Louisiana hard from his base in Texas and the party hierarchy rigged the rules in his favour. However, Mr Buchanan barnstormed through the state in recent days. Both wanted to be able to fight Iowa next week as the conservative standard-bearer.

Elizabeth Taylor and Larry Fortensky, who met at a drug rehabilitation clinic. The building worker had an illustrious list of predecessors, including, from left, the film star Michael Wilding, Mike Todd who died in a plane crash, Eddie Fisher, Richard Burton who was married twice to the actress, and Senator John Warner

Elizabeth Taylor ends 'forever' marriage

FROM GILES WHITTELL IN LOS ANGELES

IF HER past is any guide, she will be marrying again soon.

After eight weddings to seven men in 41 years, Elizabeth Taylor has filed for divorce from the man of whom she announced in 1991: "This is it, for ever."

Ms Taylor met Larry Fortensky, a building worker 20 years her junior, in a California drug rehabilitation clinic in 1988.

When they married five years ago at a "private" ceremony at Michael Jackson's Neverland Ranch, helicopters laden with television cameras jostled for airspace and paparazzi hid in the bushes.

They separated last August and the divorce papers, filed at the California Superior Court in Los Angeles on Monday, cited "irreconcilable differences". The actress's

Ms Taylor and Conrad Hilton, her first husband lawyer, Neil Papiano, said she was still fond of Mr Fortensky and that the divorce would be swift, amicable and private. He declined to confirm whether there was a pre-nuptial agreement, but such contracts have smoothed her previous divorces.

Ms Taylor's first marriage in 1950 was to Conrad Hilton, the hotel chain heir, when she was 18. After less than a year she left him for Michael Wilding, who was more than twice her age. In 1957, she married Mike Todd, who died when his plane crashed a year later. She was married once to the Hollywood lothario Eddie Fisher, once to Senator John Warner, and twice to Richard Burton.

Of all Ms Taylor's matrimonial adventures, none was stranger than the one just ended. All the couple appeared to have in common was their choice of clinic — a Betty Ford centre near Palm Springs — and a dependence on painkillers.

Within months of their wedding, there were rumours of discord in Ms Taylor's Bel Air mansion, where she was struggling with arthritis that led to two hip replacement operations and Mr Fortensky was said to prefer beer and television to his new wife's social round.

Clinton to give evidence on video

FROM TOM RHODES IN WASHINGTON

THE White House yesterday sought to play down a subpoena for President Clinton to testify at a fraud trial in Arkansas as Republicans seized on the latest political embarrassment as further evidence of misconduct by the First Family.

Mr Clinton had been subpoenaed by a federal judge as a witness in the Little Rock trial of Susan McDougal and her husband, James, the Clintons' business partners in the failed Whitewater land venture, and their co-defendant and Arkansas Governor, Jim Guy Tucker.

Mrs McDougal, who claims the President's testimony is vital to her trial next month, has been accused of receiving a $300,000 (£190,000) loan that David Hale, a former municipal judge, says, Mr Clinton and others pressured him to make to her in 1986.

Mr Hale, the Government's star witness, has accused Mrs McDougal, her husband and Mr Clinton of taking part in a scheme to defraud the Small Business Administration of the loan.

The former judge, who last year pleaded guilty to an unrelated fraud, later made a plea bargain to testify in the Whitewater investigation.

Mr Clinton has denied the allegations and agreed to testify next month. Lawyers for Mrs McDougal still hope the President will appear in person, but it seems certain he can satisfy the subpoena by offering either a videotaped deposition or live testimony by satellite from Washington.

The White House has been quick to argue that Mr Clinton is being called only as a character witness and President has shown other Presidents have given testimony in criminal cases. Nevertheless, testimony by a sitting President is rare. Ronald Reagan did so by videotape at the Iran-Contra trial, but the President had left office by then.

Gerald Ford gave similar evidence at a trial of a woman who was convicted of trying to shoot him, while Jimmy Carter gave a videotaped deposition in a 1978 trial relating to the fugitive financier, Robert Vesco.

The prospect of a personal appearance would place an enormous spotlight on Whitewater and related questions and could subject Mr Clinton to cross-examination by Kenneth Starr, the chief prosecutor.

Samper fights for political survival

FROM DAVID ADAMS IN BOGOTÁ

FACING allegations that he won the presidency of Colombia with $6 million (£4 million) in secret donations from drug lords, President Samper is fighting for political survival against increasing odds.

As Señor Samper's Government teeters near collapse, commentators clamouring for the President's resignation are asking whether he can survive. His electoral campaign manager and treasurer, once trusted friends, are under arrest and telling investigators about alleged financial misdeeds by the Liberal Party.

Moreover, Washington is threatening to cut financial aid to his Government and warning him that it will seek the extradition of jailed drug lords if they are not given harsh sentences.

A lawyer by training, Señor Samper insists he is innocent. While few believe such a large sum of money could have been received by his campaign without his knowledge, the President seems confident that there is no firm evidence against him. "There does not seem to be anything that really nails him," one diplomat said. "There is no cheque with his name on it and no video of him with suitcases of money."

But Señor Samper may still be forced to resign. In 1994, his campaign spent $12 million, three times the legal limit. Besides about $6 million in drug money, his party also allegedly received through fraud $2 million from a public fund for election campaigns.

Despite the lack of proof linking Señor Samper to drug money, his role in electoral fraud and oversteering may be easier to establish. In that case, experts say, he may be offered a more dignified exit — resigning over minor misconduct and thus avoiding any criminal charges that might land him in jail.

If Señor Samper opts to fight all the charges against him, his biggest obstacle would be the United States.

Leading article, page 19

$15m art disappears at airport

New York: Three works of art worth an estimated $15 million (£9.5 million) disappeared from New York's John F. Kennedy airport after an apparent gaffe by security guards (Quentin Letts writes).

The pictures, which include two pieces by Picasso, should have been placed under special guard after they were held at the airport due to bureaucratic problems. Instead, the outside contractors entrusted with their care allegedly treated them like a routine package. The three missing pieces are a 1927 Picasso painting, Woman Seated With Skull in Left Hand, a 1956 Picasso drawing called Portrait of a Woman Dedicated to Jacqueline and an 1897 painting, Paris Street by Pissarro.

They arrived in New York last Thursday in the hand luggage of Avelino González, a Mexican businessman and co-owner of the art. He was intending to take them to New York auction houses for evaluation.

Señor González was told that he lacked the proper paperwork and a "house broker" to take them through customs. In exchange for a receipt, he surrendered them to officials for safeguarding in a bonded, holding area. Dynair, a company which transports goods to the holding area, allegedly violated its own rules by failing to give the paintings special protection.

When Señor González returned to the airport the following morning to claim the pictures, they could not be found. The FBI has been called in to investigate.

Samper: under new pressure from US

If you don't listen to your doctor

هكمان النحل

Germany's wooing of uneasy Russia unsettles nerves in Central Europe

HELMUT KOHL, the German Chancellor, is preparing to meet President Yeltsin next week amid fears that Germany is slipping back into its historical role of explainer of, and occasional apologist for, a restless Russia.

The suspicions were fuelled by the tone of Herr Kohl's address to the annual Wehrkunde defence conference in Munich at the weekend. He talked of the need to understand the psychological vulnerability of the Russians and hinted that the West should tread lightly with its plans to enrol Central European states in Nato. Coming from the West's chief

Roger Boyes reports from Bonn on suspicions that Germany is slipping back into its role of occasional apologist for the Russians bridge-builder with Russia, the comments had an unsettling effect on the Central Europeans and confused Western participants.

An interviewer this week for the Polish government daily Rzeczpospolita mirrored her country's anxious view of the changing relationship in a question to Klaus Kinkel, the German Foreign Minister. "After a frosty period because of the Chechnya war, German-Russian relations seem to have become very close and friendly again — although all reformers have been excluded from the Moscow Government and despite the Russian Army trampling over human rights in Dagestan. Despite all this, you supported Russian admission to the Council of Europe. Is Russia being judged by different standards?" The minister dodged the question; he emphasised that Germany had a parallel Ostpolitik to enlarge Nato and the European Union and simultaneously to strike up a special relationship with Russia.

There is no doubt that all groups within Russia are opposed to Nato enlargement eastwards. Yet Nato retains this as one of its defining missions and Germany, of all the Western allies, has the most to gain from moving Nato's border from the River Neisse to the Bug.

There is no way of squaring the circle: one of the priorities has to give way. In the negotiations before the Kohl-Yeltsin meeting, due to begin on February 18, the Russians have come up with different, mainly warmed-up, ideas. Nato, or individual Nato countries, could strike bilateral security agreements with Central European states; that the Russians say, would be preferable to fully fledged membership. Or the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe — to which Western countries, the Central Europeans, the Ukrainians and Russians belong — could be given more muscle. None of this convinces Central Europe, nor has it persuaded the German leadership.

But the emphasis now is on understanding Russian fears rather than on swiftly accommodating the Central Europeans. Javier Solana, the Nato Secretary-General, notably omitted any dates for Nato enlargement in Munich last weekend, yet emphasised the need for quick progress on developing a strategic partnership with Russia. As President Yeltsin became more erratic, the political friendship with Germany came under strain. But senior German diplomats, having studied carefully the recent utterances of his Communist rival Gennadi Zyuganov, seem to have come to the conclusion that a Yeltsin victory in the presidential election would be marginally better for German-Russian relations. It is, however, a finely balanced calculation and talk of Nato enlargement is being muffled, at least until after the Russian election in June.

The critical question is how much Mr Yeltsin can be offered by Germany, on behalf of the West. Germany and Nato could never offer Russia a veto on alliance affairs. But a certain vagueness about Nato enlargement seems to be the order of the day.

Letters, page 19

Rifkind's boast of EU leadership mocked by Brittan

By MICHAEL BINYON, DIPLOMATIC EDITOR

MALCOLM Rifkind, the Foreign Secretary, claimed yesterday that Britain would lead the way in Europe in strengthening relations with America and promoting transatlantic free trade. His claim was hotly disputed by Sir Leon Brittan, the European Commissioner responsible for European Union relations with America.

His speech comes as Britsels has begun a counter-offensive against what it sees as British attempts to delay or derail European economic and monetary union (EMU).

Mr Rifkind, addressing the Transatlantic Policy Network, said: "We must apply the transatlantic partnership to furthering our prosperity, just as we do for our security. Britain will be leading the way in this effort. As Europe's foremost proponent of free trade, Britain will be a champion of greater economic liberalisation across the Atlantic."

His speech dwelt on the need for a new international framework to underpin the close economic relations between Europe and America.

His remarks will, in themselves, raise no hackles in Brussels, where the Commission is committed to deepening its ties and dialogue with Washington. However, Brit-tain's attempt to claim credit for the new initiative will irritate both Sir Leon and the Spanish, who made a revitalised EU relationship with America a centrepiece of their presidency.

Interviewed yesterday on his speech, Mr Rifkind told the BBC it was a plea to Europe to turn its attention outwards. "There is a process of global liberalisation taking place, and our relations with North America are only part of that process which also ultimately has to involve the Far East and other parts of the world."

Rifkind beware, page 18

London invites Chirac

THE Queen has invited President Chirac to pay a state visit to Britain just weeks before the likely start of the inter-governmental conference (IGC) on the European Union's future (Michael Binyon writes).

The timing of the visit, from May 14 till May 17, is significant. Buckingham Palace, at the prompting of the Government, has invited him within a year of taking office and only months after he was given an effusive welcome by John Major at Chequers last October.

With the close relations between London and Paris, cemented by co-operation in Bosnia, there is talk of a new entente cordiale. President Chirac may also be invited to address a meeting of the Houses of Parliament.

There is little disguising Britain's political interest in such a visit. In the run-up to the IGC, which will review the Maastricht treaty, the Government is anxious not to be isolated, and is making strenuous effort to forge alliances with European Union partners on issues where it shares their views.

An undeclared aim of policy towards France is to wean Paris from the federalist embrace of Germany and prevent a solid Franco-German front on all negotiating issues.

Pierre Gobert, left, and Philippe Cézanne, discuss "Portrait of Madame Cézanne with loosened hair", by their great-grandfather, at the Tate

Great-grandsons give their impressions of Cézanne

By LEYLA LINTON

PHILIPPE Cézanne was feted in London this week as he arrived for the opening of an exhibition of his great-grandfather's work. Selling out fast, with thousands of people jamming the Tate's switchboard, the exhibition is expected to be more popular than the Picasso display in London in 1994.

Two of Cézanne's great-grandsons are in town for the exhibition, which opens tomorrow. Neither M Cézanne nor his cousin, Pierre Gobert, 61, inherited any of the paintings but confess to sharing the artist's temperament. "Like my great-grandfather I am stubborn," M Cézanne, who works as an art expert, said. "I explode just like Cézanne exploded. I bottle up annoying remarks that people have made until suddenly a little thing sets me off. Cézanne was like that. That is something of Cézanne that we have kept. We are all opinionated."

M Gobert has not inherited any of his great-grandfather's talent but sees some similarities in his work as an aeronautical engineer. "I have inherited in my work his perfectionism. Just like him, I do not like things to be badly done — even if it is just changing the taps in the bathroom."

Both men share Cézanne's introversion. "My great-grandfather went into painting like some go into religion," M Cézanne said. "He decided from the outset to be, alone, solitary like a monk. Wish. All the family is shy."

M Cézanne says he knew he would never become a painter. At school, his art teachers would reproach him. "They would always say to me, 'If only your great-grandfather could see you! And that was terrible.' He now owns a gallery near the Louvre. The name of Cézanne, he admits, has helped him in his career, although it bothered him at first. "I wanted to be known for myself, but it was difficult."

There is now only one artist among the descendants of Cézanne, and she prefers not to be connected with the name of the great painter, to ensure her own artistic freedom.

The cousins' grandparents liked. She reminded him that it used to hang on the wall at home when he was a child.

Those anxious to find out about Cézanne, the man, from his descendants will be disappointed. M Cézanne said: "He was a very secretive man. It seemed normal that we had connections with Renoir's family and that they would come to the house. It was just family history."

"One can only know him through his paintings and this exhibition will allow the public to really know the artist and to understand him through his work."

Grain of scientific truth in tale of poisoned Tsarina

FROM THOMAS DE WAAL IN MOSCOW

A MURDER mystery 400 years old may be solved by archaeologists who have disinterred the body of Anastasia, the queen of Ivan the Terrible, one of Russia's most bloodthirsty tsars.

"We cannot rule out poisoning," was the verdict yesterday of a chemical expert, Natalya Voronova, who had examined Anastasia's body in her tomb in Archangel Cathedral, in the Kremlin. Ms Voronova said she had found large doses of mercury salts in the queen's hair. Hair preserves poisons longer than any other part of the body and indicates how much the body has absorbed.

Tradition has it that the young Anastasia was poisoned by jealous rivals at court, who resented her influence. Born Anastasia Zakharina, she was Ivan IV's first wife and a love match who bore him six children. She came from a wealthy family, ancestors of the Romanov dynasty, but was considered by many courtiers to be an upstart not worthy of a tsar.

The Byzantine intrigues of the affair are known to millions of Russians through Sergei Eisenstein's film Ivan the Terrible. Political murder was a not uncommon way of settling scores in 16th-century Moscow and Ivan himself later stabbed and killed his favourite son in an argument.

It was the early death in 1561 of his beloved Anastasia, who was still in her twenties, that pushed Ivan, who had a reformist reputation in the early years of his reign, into the reign of terror that earned him his sobriquet "the Terrible" (in Russian, "the Cruel"). He married six more times and was eventually excommunicated by the Orthodox Church.

Anastasia's sarcophagus was opened during a dig in the Kremlin cathedral, the burying place of all the early tsars. The Kremlin is being gradually restored, allowing archaeologists unique opportunities to excavate the tombs.

Mercury salts could be procured from physicians in 16th-century Moscow, and although a court plotter may have slipped them into the queen's wine there may also be a more innocent explanation. Ms Voronova said. The salts were used in the distant past as a medicine for a range of diseases, including leprosy and syphilis, she said. Traces of mercury were also found in the remains of Ivan himself when they were examined in the 1960s, leading many historians to believe that he died of syphilis.

Ivan the Terrible: may have died of syphilis

Bankers protest over Moscow killings

Moscow: An alliance of Russian businessmen and bankers announced yesterday it was drafting a protest letter to President Yeltsin after the murder of another Moscow banker, the latest victim in an epidemic of contract killings (Thomas de Waal writes).

Aleksandr Butenko, 26, the first deputy chairman of Creditinvest Bank, was found on Monday in a car park with his throat cut and multiple knife wounds. He is the 33rd lead-

As the saying goes, "You can't please all of the people all of the time." But given that it costs five times as much to gain a new customer, it does to keep an existing one, it pays to hang onto them. A Customer Careline can help. It's an easy way for people to get in touch with you, whether it's to ask for advice, make suggestions on improving your service or simply to complain. A Careline also shows you value customer's opinions, that your company is prepared to listen. In fact, a recent survey found that 82% of customers are likely to re-order with you, again if their complaint is successfully dealt with. For more information on your own Customer Careline, talk to us on 0800 800 800.

Work smarter,
not just harder.

BT

someone else will

Freefone 0800 800 800 workinbs@boat.bt.com

هكمان النفل

Serb officers are questioned over war crimes claims

By STACY SULLIVAN IN SARAJEVO AND OUR FOREIGN STAFF

WAR crimes investigators from The Hague yesterday questioned three high-ranking Bosnian Serb military officers seized by the Bosnian Government in Sarajevo last week, and examined Bosnian demands that they should be indicted as war criminals.

The investigators, from the International War Crimes Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, said it was far too early for any findings and they had still to question other men being held by the Government.

Bakir Alispahic, the Bosnian Minister of the Interior, insisted, however, that the Government had evidence that the two senior Bosnian Serb officers, General Djordje Djukic and Colonel Aleksa Krstanovic, "not only participated in killing civilians but also helped organise the killing of civilians".

The Bosnian Serbs, who had reported the disappearance of eight soldiers to Nato officials in Sarajevo, said they were breaking off relations with the Bosnian Government in retaliation for the arrests — a move that could have serious implications for the Dayton peace accord.

With tension over the seizures growing, Carl Bildt, the international mediator, urged Hasan Muratovic, the Bosnian Prime Minister, at a joint news conference in Davos, Switzerland, yesterday to clear up the highly charged issue "very quickly indeed".

Bosnian police captured the eight Bosnian Serb soldiers on three occasions between January 20 and February 2 in circumstances which are unclear but which Mr Alispahic described as "extensive traffic control checks".

The Government said it would release three of the eight, but claimed to have evidence that three others, in addition to General Djukic and Colonel Krstanovic, had carried out massacres of civilians. A government spokesman said all the evidence would be turned over to The Hague investigators, three of whom are conducting inquiries in Sarajevo. Mr Alispahic refused to give details of the evidence.

Mirza Hajric, the Bosnian government spokesman, said the detainees would be released if the investigators determined that there was not enough evidence to prosecute them. "If The Hague says there is not enough evidence to prosecute them, we will release them," he said.

General Djukic is a close associate of General Ratko Mladic, the Bosnian Serb army commander who has been indicted by the tribunal for alleged war crimes. General Djukic and Colonel Krstanovic were believed to have been arrested on government territory on January 30 in Sarajevo on their way to a Nato meeting.

Milosevic and Karadzic meet

PRESIDENT Milosevic of Serbia has recently met Radovan Karadzic, the Bosnian Serb leader who is wanted by the International War Crimes Tribunal. Dr Karadzic led a delegation to Dobanovci, an army compound near Belgrade, pressing for the lifting of the border blockade which Mr Milosevic imposed in 1994.

The aim of the meeting was to lift the blockade "discreetly" because Mr Milosevic is anxious not to jeopardise his high standing with the international community. "Everybody knew. It was reported, and yet British and European diplomats decided to turn a blind eye," a Belgrade observer said.

The three others under investigation were identified as Tese Tesic, Petar Todorovic and Dusan Borovic, and were said to have carried out massacres in the east Bosnian towns of Zvornik, Vlasenica, Visegrad and Foca. Mr Alispahic said they were arrested when their civilian car was found carrying rifles, hand grenades and a substantial amount of ammunition.

Officials from the International Committee of the Red Cross requested permission to visit the prisoners yesterday but were denied access by the Bosnian Government, according to Anne Sophie Bonfield, the Red Cross spokeswoman. Nato officials said that the arrests were likely to inflame tensions around Sarajevo and could jeopardise the fragile peace process taking hold across the country. Brigadier Andrew Cumming, the Nato spokesman, said the arrests were "provocative and inflammatory".

Relations between the two former warring sides around Sarajevo, which officially came under Bosnian government control on Sunday, have been tense since the peace process began. Thousands of Serbs have been leaving the region, fearing that the Bosnian Government would mete out revenge when it took over the area. The arrests are likely to fan their fears and quicken the exodus.

The war crimes tribunal, set up by the United Nations and headed by Richard Goldstone, the chief prosecutor, has so far charged 52 suspects with war crimes linked to the Bosnian War. Only one, a Bosnian Serb, has been taken into custody.

Jarnac seeks tips on crowd control

FROM BEN MACINTYRE IN PARIS

DURING his life, François Mitterrand would never have considered taking advice from arch-rival Charles de Gaulle, but in death he may benefit from the wisdom of those who care for the general's tomb and share a problem: tourists.

The tiny town of Jarnac in southwest France has been inundated with pilgrims since Mitterrand was buried there last month, while Colombey-les-Deux-Églises, the hamlet in eastern France where de Gaulle was interred, has been a tourist attraction for 25 years.

Maurice Voiron, the besieged Mayor of Jarnac, is to visit Colombey next Saturday to see if his opposite number there has any tips on dealing with the crowds. About 140,000 people visit Colombey every year, but Jarnac (population: 4,000) has had more than 70,000 in four weeks.

The villagers of Jarnac see the influx as a mixed blessing. Shopkeepers are doing a roaring trade, and tourists can choose from a wealth of souvenirs, including plaster busts depicting Mitterrand. But parking and other facilities cannot cope with the tourists, visitors to the Mitterrand tomb have trampled neighbouring graves and the once-empty streets are choked with traffic. Ten requests to build hotels have arrived, while dozens of artists and architects have offered to build a Mitterrand memorial to rival the giant stone Cross of Lorraine at Colombey.

In the days leading to the Mitterrand funeral, newspapers waxed lyrical about "the legendary tranquillity" of Jarnac. But that has vanished for ever. M Voiron says he needs to get away from the frantic bustle that has become village life. After the weekend, he is going on holiday to the Caribbean.

Antonio Ruiz Soler, who died this week, revolutionised male flamenco dancing

Lament for flamenco master

FROM EDWARD OWEN IN MADRID

THE WORLD of flamenco was yesterday lamenting the loss of one of its greatest dancers, Antonio Ruiz Soler, 74, who died in Madrid after a long illness.

Antonio was the first ambassador of flamenco, taking the duende — the soul and feeling for flamenco song, dance and guitar — around the world. Some of his greatest triumphs were at Carnegie Hall in New York, La Scala in Milan and the Cambridge Theatre in London.

Yesterday he lay in state in his dance studio as a host of fellow artists paid their respects. The dancer died at his home on Monday from a thrombosis. He had been virtually bedridden since suffering a stroke in 1994. Antonio had a colourful private life. His lovers allegedly included the Duke of Windsor, the Duchess of Alba and Ava Gardner.

"He was God in the flamenco world," Elke Stolzenberg, a German photographer of flamenco, said yesterday. She was one of the stream of hopefuls from around the world who came to Spain to learn flamenco after its art was spread by Antonio. Madrid's flamenco dance studios are now full of Australians, Japanese and Americans.

"He revolutionised the male flamenco dance," she said. "He became the first man to use his arms, not just his feet, but he was also one of the few who was expert at everything — the bolero, classical Spanish dance, regional dances and flamenco."

Antonio started at dance school at the age of five in his native Seville, where he will be buried today. By the time he was seven, he was performing at the city's 1929 World Fair. He toured the world with his own company and was the first Spanish artist to appear in the Soviet Union. He danced at the wedding of King Farouk of Egypt.

Socialist shot dead by Eta

Madrid: A founder-member of the ruling Spanish Socialist Party and brother of a former Justice Minister was shot dead yesterday by suspected Euzko terrorist in San Sebastian as violence mounted in the Basque region in the run-up to the general election on March 3 (Edward Owen writes).

Fernando Mugica, 61, a lawyer, was shot twice in the back of the head by two masked men as he took his customary afternoon walk from the provincial court in the Basque resort to the headquarters of the Basque Socialist Party. Senor Mugica was a candidate in the election.

The terrorists escaped after the murder, the first by Eta this year, with 15 dead last year.

UN ordered to pay Briton

New York: The United Nations has been ordered to compensate and make a public apology to a British man dismissed from its peace-keeping operation in Somalia after £2.6 million was stolen from the UN base in Mogadishu (James Bone writes).

Douglas Manson, 68, a Glaswegian now living in Canada, said from his home in Unionville, Ontario, that he felt vindicated by the decision of an independent administrative tribunal.

Pandas ill from lack of bamboo

Peking: The 14 pandas at the zoo here are suffering from stomach-ache because their keepers are short of arrow bamboo, the animals' staple food. They have substituted beef, eggs, milk and apples (James Pringle writes). The zoo, facing a cash crisis, cannot afford the price of bamboo which has soared since farmers are growing cash crops.

Rising damp

Ampuis, France: A pensioner dug a well 110ft deep in his garden in an unsuccessful search for water — then a spring began to flow in his living room soon after at a rate of 250 gallons an hour (AFP).

ENDS SUNDAY

The Sharps January SALE

84 Bedroom Styles
LESS THAN HALF PRICE

ALL OFFERS END SUNDAY FEB 11th

The Sharps January Sale is nearly over. You've got until Sunday to buy a Sharps bedroom at less than half the normal price. Choose any of our 84 bedroom styles, save hundreds of pounds and still get the unrivalled craftsmanship, quality and service that have made Sharps Britain's No.1 bedroom company. But you'll have to hurry — all discounts and offers in Sharps January Sale end 4pm Sunday Feb 11th.

VISIT A SHOWROOM OR PHONE FREE 0800 789 789

SHOWROOM OPENING TIMES: MONDAY-SATURDAY 9.30-5.30 ALL SHOWROOMS OPEN SUNDAY 10.00-4.00

SHOWROOMS NATIONWIDE
LONDON
BIRMINGHAM
MANCHESTER
GLoucester
Cardiff
Belfast
Bristol
Exeter
Hull
Leeds
Liverpool
Newcastle
Nottingham
Preston
Sheffield
Southampton
Stoke
Sunderland
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

SOUTH EAST
Bournemouth
Brighton Canterbury
Dorchester
Exeter
Folkestone
Hastings
Hemel Hempstead
Hitchin
Luton
Maidstone
Norwich
Oxford
Reading
Slough
St Albans
Stratford
Surrey
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

EAST ANGLIA
Cambridge
Colchester
Ipswich
Norwich
Peterborough
Suffolk
Surrey
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

SOUTH
Birmingham
Bristol
Cardiff
Exeter
Folkestone
Hastings
Hemel Hempstead
Hitchin
Luton
Maidstone
Norwich
Oxford
Reading
Slough
St Albans
Stratford
Surrey
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

THE MIDLANDS
Coventry
Derby
Leeds
Liverpool
Manchester
Nottingham
Preston
Sheffield
Southampton
Stoke
Sunderland
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

WALES & THE WEST
Cardiff
Exeter
Folkestone
Hastings
Hemel Hempstead
Hitchin
Luton
Maidstone
Norwich
Oxford
Reading
Slough
St Albans
Stratford
Surrey
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

Wales & The West
Cardiff
Exeter
Folkestone
Hastings
Hemel Hempstead
Hitchin
Luton
Maidstone
Norwich
Oxford
Reading
Slough
St Albans
Stratford
Surrey
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

Wales & The West
Cardiff
Exeter
Folkestone
Hastings
Hemel Hempstead
Hitchin
Luton
Maidstone
Norwich
Oxford
Reading
Slough
St Albans
Stratford
Surrey
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

Wales & The West
Cardiff
Exeter
Folkestone
Hastings
Hemel Hempstead
Hitchin
Luton
Maidstone
Norwich
Oxford
Reading
Slough
St Albans
Stratford
Surrey
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

Wales & The West
Cardiff
Exeter
Folkestone
Hastings
Hemel Hempstead
Hitchin
Luton
Maidstone
Norwich
Oxford
Reading
Slough
St Albans
Stratford
Surrey
Telford
Walsley
Wolverhampton
York

Zambia police blockade paper

Harare: Police surrounded the offices of Zambia's independent Post daily newspaper in Lusaka yesterday while Fred Mwaanga, Bright Mwaanga and Masautso Phiri, three senior executives, were held on sedition charges (Michael Hartmann writes).

The most serious in the long series of clashes between the Post and President Chiluba's Government centres on disclosures about a planned referendum on constitutional changes. The most controversial alleged revision would debar former President Ka-unda, 71, from attempting a return to power. Monday's edition of the Post carrying the referendum plan was declared a banned publication. Yesterday's edition carried large white spaces with the words "censored" across them.

Nokia Digital Security. Cellphones Direct Prices!

LIMITED OFFER
£9.99 INC. VAT
FREE CONNECTION TO VOIP
PERSONAL WORLD

NOKIA
GSM MODEL 2010.

- ◆ 99 name/number memory
- ◆ 100 mins talk-time
- ◆ 30 hrs standby-time
- ◆ Complete with standard battery and rapid travel charger
- ◆ Weight approx 320g

FREE IN-CAR ADAPTOR/CHARGER
FREE SPARE BATTERY
FREE LEXICON CASE
TOGETHER WORTH OVER £75

Trust Cellphones Direct to make a world of difference to digital phone prices. With FREE connection to the Vodafone PersonalWorld Tariff, so you can use the phone throughout the UK, most of Europe and beyond on the GSM international network. With digital call clarity and absolute confidentiality.

Simply phone us with your credit card details to receive your phone plus valuable extras within 4 working days.

FREE CONNECTION TO VOIP PERSONAL WORLD
Monthly Rental	£17.63 (£15 + VAT)
Peak Rate Calls	42p per min (35p + VAT)
Off Peak Rate	18p per min (15p + VAT)

GUARANTEED PEACE OF MIND
Your phone is covered by our 14 days no quibble money back promise.

Cellphones Direct

ORDER NOW FOR FREE DELIVERY IN 4 WORKING DAYS

FREEPHONE 0500 000 888
CREDIT CARD ORDERING HOTLINE WEEKDAYS 9-5.30 WEEKENDS 9-5.30

PLEASE HAVE YOUR CREDIT CARD AND THIS ADVERTISEMENT READY WHEN YOU CALL. WE ARE NOT ABLE TO ACCEPT CREDIT CARDS. Offer subject to status and a standard network contract for each phone with Cellphones Direct Ltd. 185 Lower Richmond Road, Richmond, Surrey TW9 1LN. Full written details and terms and conditions of this offer are available on request. © Copyright. Registered No. 2953222

"Well, it's not the ideal location but it's all they had left on their books"

Should've talked to CNT.

Perfect premises: lousy location?
Not when you deal with CNT.

They own land and premises of all types and size in 19 locations across the country. And they're all well connected to land, sea and air communications, and strategically located for major domestic and European markets.

You'll also find that dealing with CNT is a lot less hassle. Dealing direct with the owners means the process is very streamlined. Plus: CNT can grant planning permission in most cases, and offer help with grants, connection to utilities, legal matters, personnel and more.

All this is the "added value" which comes with CNT land and premises.

So don't get stuck with less than the best. Contact CNT and get exactly what you want.

Fill in the coupon and send to CNT, Box 925, Milton Keynes MK9 3PF.

Name: _____

Company: _____

Address: _____

Postcode: _____ Tel. No: _____

Land and premises with added value.

Basildon Bracknell Central Lancashire Corby Crawley Harlow Hatfield Hemel Hempstead Milton Keynes Northampton
Peterborough Redditch Runcorn Skelmersdale Stevenage Telford Warrington Washington Welwyn Garden City

Cool kids know what they want

Above: CASSIA CLARKE, aged two, in a multicoloured patchwork dress and matching hat, £42.95, Florianne, Kids Universe, Selfridges (0171-629 1234). Far right: Cassia wears a red and white check dress, £13, Boots Children's Wear, selected branches (01159 495 581)

Above: DELILAH MAJSTOROVIC, aged six, in a cardigan, £15, leggings, £7, M&S (0171-935 4422); sunflower pumps, £10.99, Ravel (0171-631 0224); puffy jacket, £26.99, Next (0116-284 9424); hat, £89, Ninivah Khomo, 5 Beauchamp Place, SW3

CASSIA

Above: her mother, Jaqueline Clarke, says: "Cassia enjoyed dressing up and thought it was great fun. The little dresses were very pretty without being too cute. When buying clothes I try to find practical, easy-to-iron pieces. I tend to buy a lot of all-in-ones rather than separates."

DELILAH

Left: her mother, Ninivah Khomo, says: "Delilah enjoyed wearing the gingham pants, patchwork knit cardigan and reversible puffy jacket. She thought they were cool. When buying for Delilah, I look for different types of looks from traditional pretty dresses to casual sporty looks."

RORY

Left: his mother, Florence Torrens, says: "Rory thought the clothes were cool and comfortable. He loves bright colours and is interested in what he wears. He has a uniform for school and looks forward to the weekends so he can wear what he likes. I buy big separates which he can grow into. He also loves wearing hats."

Three mothers photograph their children in this spring's looks

I used to be that parent who would dread the day that their sons and daughters turned 13. Teenagers wanted to do their own thing, listen to loud music — well, they called it music — and hang out with their friends to all hours. Mostly, they wanted to choose their own clothes. But I have some bad news. Today, the under-fives know exactly what they will and will not wear.

The children's-wear industry has shown phenomenal growth in the past five years. Whereas previously the search for anything more adventurous than a tartan mini-kilt or a pair of denim dungarees would necessitate a trip to the Continent, there is now an endless choice of brands and labels to suit every occasion on every high street, from Naf-Naf and Oilly to Boots and French Connection. Selfridges on Oxford Street now has a huge department called Kids Universe, a Willy Wonka-esque wonderland which caters to a child's every desire.

The antithesis of the formal velvet dresses and mini-blazers of the traditionalists, the guiding trend for children's wear is colourful and comfortable. The consensus of the children who modelled for our

Fashion journalist of the year

IAIN R. WEBB

fashion page was their desire to look "cool". This can describe anything from a padded puffy jacket to a handkerchief worn bandanna-style. Bright paintbox colours are popular with both parents and their children. Many of the latest styles feature snazzy patchwork fabrics and appliqué patches. Gingham is once again a favourite for younger babies' wear while older ages prefer the oversized street-style look of utilitarian parkas with lots of zips and pockets, and baggy combat trousers. The funky looks of today's pop and rap groups provide a template for five-year-olds who can't even spell MNS.

Mothers tend to look for easy clothes which will wash and wear.

As proud parents are forever flashing happy snaps of their offspring, The Times asked three mums to become photographers for the day and snap their children in some of this spring's latest looks.

Left: RORY JOBLING, aged five, in a check shirt, £49, yellow coat, £124.30, khaki trousers, £55.55, Oilly (012254 45907). Right: Rory wears a red cotton shirt, £28, blue jeans, £27, French Connection, 249 Regent St. W1 and selected branches; boot shoes, £42, Russell and Bromley, 64 Kings Road, SW6 and selected branches (0171-584 5445)

A golden OPPORTUNITY WITH 10% OFF AT SELFRIDGES.

OPEN A GOLD ACCOUNT AT SELFRIDGES

between now and 23rd February 1996, and we'll give you 10% off most purchases* on the first day you use your new account. You can open a Gold Account (subject to status) at selected sites throughout the store. It's a golden opportunity too good to miss.

*Offer excludes Services, Photographic and Computers.

For further information call 0171 318 3217. Written quotation on request.

SELFRIDGES
Oxford Street London

Time to own up to being middle-class

Are the mocked and beleaguered people of suburban Middle England about to hit back? Jane Gordon defends a world of good sense and traditional values

Which is not to say that, in our way, we are not pioneers leading the way to exotic things such as the Dordogne, dishwashers, Delia Smith and dyslexia. Indeed, so much that was once foreign might still be if the middle classes hadn't discovered them — Montessori, muesli, pasta, parmesan, woks, Bulgarian cabernet sauvignon and sun-dried tomatoes.

Moreover, all of our society's most responsible, caring and considerate innovations and inventions are middle-class. Who would worry about scooping poop, the National Trust, meals on wheels, Poppy Day, bottle banks, school league tables or saving the whale if the middle classes didn't?

Almost everything that is dismissively labelled middle-class has, in its way, improved the quality of life a great deal more than anything created by or for any other sector of the population.

What have the upper classes contributed to our society — apart from blood sports and the ideal example of the dysfunctional family offered by the Windsors? What have the working classes given us — apart from pit-bull terriers, ghetto-blasters and the replacement of the once crisp Celia Johnson BBC accent with a media dominated by Eswary English?

But the time is right for a middle-class revival. People are beginning to realise the value of the things that have always preoccupied the middle classes — the traditional family, sound education, marriage, security, responsibility, good health and good manners.

In fact there are signs that as we move into the next century the middle classes might become fashionable again. Already market analysts have noted that the trend in the late Nineties will be towards what they now term "defensive spending", rather than the "profligate spending" that has dominated the past three decades.

Why, there is even a middle-class youth cult emerging — "easy listening" — where the young go to clubs that play Burt Bacharach records wearing cardigans, cravats and stay-pressed trousers.

Very soon it may be safe for those of us who are middle-class to stand up with pride without facing a barrage of abuse. With Tony Blair on our side we might, perhaps, be able to convince the world we are a moral majority and not, as it feels right now, a moral minority.

Sharing and caring: the traditional family can hold up its head again red ribbon on her lapel the whole evening, and at some point during the evening somebody introduced him to me.

"Should I know you?" he said. "Oh no," said a man from the publishing house, "she's middle market — more Blyton than Booker."

Middle-class people, I have subsequently decided, are not expected to think, or worry or create in the way that the eccentric upper classes or the tortured working classes do. We are not supposed to have any sort of sensitivity, compassion, instinct or insight into the human condition. Rather, we are condemned as repressed, suburban, unimaginative and outmoded.

On the way home from the party I made mental notes about the way in which the rest of society views the middle classes. And gradually I began to realise that the so-called moral decline that everyone is always bemoaning could be directly linked to the unfashionability of middle-class life, values and aspirations.

Driving my Volvo down the middle of the road towards home, I was struck by how all those things that have become part of the eternal parody of our class have, in fact, much more worth than anyone will acknowledge. Oh, I know that the Volvo is not an exciting vehicle, I know that supposedly no one ever made love in the back of one, but the marvellous thing about the car I drive is that it has a unique safety factor — its middle-class driver — that renders it beyond the interest of the casual car thief, joyrider or, for that matter, the policeman.

Then I began to make a list of the other middle-class icons that were generally ridiculed by the rest of the population but which were sound and sensible innovations — Laura Ashley, Scholl sandals, cardigans, Vivella shirts, Teasmades, hostess trolleys, garden centres and The Archers — to identify but a few.

I quickly realised that however much other people might howl with laughter at these symbols of middle-class life, they had about them an inherent value or practicality that was missing from the rest of our harsh, modern, anti-middle-class world. Traditionally thrifty and careful with money, the middle classes are responsible for many of what might be called consumer endurables — things that pass the test of time.

Albie Kingston: "It is open season for others to insult you if you are educated, employed and decent"

It occurred to me last week, at the birthday party of a friend, that there was one thing left in life for which a person can never be forgiven. Half of those present in the elegant drawing room filled with faded antiques were keen to appear effortlessly "at home" with the upper-class hostess, while the rest of the throng were happier to expose, and in some cases exaggerate, their working-class roots, with strangled accents, aggressive poses and overbearing opinions.

Somewhere in between these two extremes stood the unforgiven. A man called John and me. The only two representatives, at least the only happily self-confessed representatives, of the much-maligned middle classes.

Conversation was a little stilted. I found myself on the fringe of a cosmopolitan grouping that included a man who had recently emerged from an open prison, a woman who had married a Muslim and converted to the faith and a chap who was a political refugee from some unpronounceable African state.

Everyone looked very intent as they described their various origins. Until, that is, someone asked me where I was "from".

"Well, Surrey originally," I said. "How simply terrible for you," said the hostess, repeating my reply, at the top of her high-pitched voice, to the merriment of all the other guests.

"Actually," I said a little defensively, "it wasn't terrible at all. It was really rather idyllic — a secure childhood with lots of freedom and countryside..."

"Green-belt rather than green-wells," sneered a member of the smart set.

John, whose upbringing in Hertfordshire was marginally less amusing, was the only person who seemed to have shared what the others scoffingly dismissed as a "Just William, Acacia Avenue" childhood.

At a pre-Christmas publishing party a few weeks earlier I had been subjected to a similar display of comic disdain.

The star guest that night was a very charming (as it turned out) shaven-headed "working-class" writer who had just published a rapturously reviewed novel written entirely in his own brand of provincial patois. The head of the publishing house wore him like a

Testimony that middle-class values saved from scorn	Testimony that middle-class values saved from scorn	Testimony that middle-class values saved from scorn	Testimony that middle-class values saved from scorn
The piano	Brown bread	Anorexia	The poop scoop
The horse	Montessori Schools	Dyslexia	The bottle bank
The whale	Muesli	Bulimia	Neighbourhood Watch
The Labrador	Acupuncture	PMT	Garden centres
The ozone layer	Herbal teas	Natural childbirth	Maritime soldiers
BBC2	Lego	ME	Cling-film
Tuscany	Milperal water	HRT	Yoghurt
Breast feeding	Skimmed milk	Braces	Radio 4
Church of England	Which?	Cholesterol	John Lewis
The National Trust	Dualit toasters	Food allergies	Unleaded petrol

A word from the front line

SIMON CRESSWELL, 35, a partner in the estate agency Finlay Brewer: "I think one of the reasons why no one ever hears the voice of the middle classes is that we were all brought up not to shout. We were raised to behave well, to be nice, to do unto others as we would be done by. We are too well-mannered to stand up and say what we might really think and mean about other sectors of society."

"There is a selfishness about the upper classes and the working classes that is missing from those of us who live in the middle."

"And our fear of offending others has made us a bit of a joke."

"It's been said before, but I do think that it is true that the middle classes are the real workers. We have been raised to believe that hard work, that real endeavour, will pay off. We work to targets set by our mothers and fathers. We just get on with it, quietly achieving because we work hard and believe in things like responsibility and security."

"But no one, and certainly not the Conservative Government, seems to recognise this fact. It's ironic, but maybe we need a Labour government to give us back our worth and self-respect. Perhaps Tony Blair will start to shout for the middle classes."

LIV O'HANLON, 40, mother of two, who lives in a gentrified square in south London: "I am bourgeois on both sides, and probably slightly ashamed to admit it. I live in what I suppose you might call a middle-class enclave in Lambeth."

"In the centre of our square is a garden, the upkeep of which is paid by the freeholders here. But, of course, we don't use it because the people from the high-rise blocks down the road exercise their rights in it — their rotweilers and dachshunds — and we can't let our children play there because they might be savaged or contaminated by dog faeces. In fact, the chap who was the keyholder was so frightened by the responsibility — and the way in which the dog-walkers abused him — that he threw away the key."

Ambition, hard work, responsibility — and fear. The life of the middle classes in England today

Hostess trolley: middle-class icon

"We haven't said anything because the yobboes with their cans of lager would send their dog Tyson to tip out our throats. In a sense, I suppose you could call us the oppressed middle classes of Lambeth because, when a neighbour of mine recently applied for planning permission for a tiny extension to his house, he was refused by the council on the ground that his house was quite big enough already."

"Meanwhile, the properties owned by the housing associations are allowed to do whatever they want. When my friend questioned his refusal, he was asked why he wanted to live here and was told that Lambeth didn't want the middle classes. Even though, of course, we're probably the only residents who pay their rates."

"Most of us here are liberal middle-class, and we have got to the stage where we would shudder to say boo to a burglar for fear of not understanding his motivation."

ALBIE KINGSTON, 41, mother of two, who lives in a leafy suburb of Twickenham: "There is a stigma in society about being middle-class. In the current climate of political correctness you cannot say anything derogatory about any group of the population apart from the middle classes. We are sneered at and despised for being sensible and honourable and responsible. We are looked down upon because we live in the suburbs and don't read The Guardian. And while I accept that there was a time when the middle classes were repressed emotionally, I don't think that is true now. We do show our emotions, we do pay our taxes, we do care and we do take responsibility for ourselves and our families."

"There has never been a middle-class serial killer, middle-class children are not generally on 'at-risk' registers, middle-class people don't as a rule behave in a way that offends or disturbs others. Yet it is open season for others to insult you if you are educated, employed and decent."

"We are the only people still flogging on, still saying to our children 'you have got to work hard if you want to get on', even though we have a nagging doubt that perhaps it isn't worth it."

"The middle classes are the glue that holds society together. There isn't a true democracy in the world that doesn't have a large middle class. Without the middle classes you have a dictatorship. Yet no one seems to appreciate that it is the middle classes that are funding the whole show. I think we are about to see a backlash, a middle-class uprising."

Is someone poaching your nest egg

At the moment, you probably keep your savings in a Bank or Building Society account. It makes sense. Especially if you need money for everyday expenses like bills or small purchases.

However, if you want to build up a lump sum over a few years you might well be losing out. You see, the chances are that whenever you earn interest the taxman will take 20% or more. This can make a really large hole in your savings.

With Eagle Star, though, you don't have to pay him a penny. If you're able to put aside a small amount each month you can now save in the same way as some of the wealthiest people in Britain.

If you would like an information pack and would like to stop shelling out, please give us a call.

Telephone: 0500 600 560
Call weekdays 8am - 8pm and Saturdays 9am - 2pm

EAGLE STAR

Direct

As the plan is a PEP, its value, including reinvested income, can fluctuate and is not guaranteed. Eagle Star Direct is an introducer only to Eagle Star Marketing Group, members of which are regulated by the Personal Investment Authority and IMRO for introducing clients for life assurance, pensions and unit trust business. Tax law is subject to changes which cannot be foreseen.

A house devolved against itself

Lord Mackay of Clashfern on why he rejects Edinburgh rule

There is no shortage of people proposing what they believe to be perfectly-formed means for constitutional change. But those would-be reformers wrongly assume that our present arrangements are inadequate. To lose sight of the strength and ends of our constitution could lead to lasting harm.

Of course, there is no human institution which could not be made better. But it is false logic to argue that any change must therefore be an improvement. First, it is necessary to see the value of what we have. Central to what we have is the Union, developed over a long and important period of our history.

For me, as a Scot, the value of our Union is beyond price. It is the means through which all the citizens of the United Kingdom can live together in unity and diversity. Our diversity is not in doubt. The Union consists of nations of very different sizes. It accommodates two distinct systems of law, three of education, two established churches, different languages, and many distinctive traditions. Its unity is our strength. Under the Union we have built common institutions which reconcile order with liberty under the law, national difference and common citizenship. I feel no less a Scot for having the privilege of being Lord Chancellor of Great Britain.

To "sleepwalk into separatism" would diminish us all — not only the Scots. I look at proposals on devolution and ask four questions: What are the constitutional ends that should be served? What would devolution offer me, as a Scot? What would be its practical consequences? And is there a better way?

First, the end must be to ensure that power is exercised as close as possible to the people. Civil society works when it has institutions with which people have an historic affinity, which are close to them and through which they know they can exercise power: a vigorous society in which citizens do more than pay their taxes and then abdicate. Despite all the criticism, I believe the House of Commons serves our people well, and that we should cherish the direct relationship between constituents and their MPs.

Devolution would interpose a new layer of politicians between the people of Scotland and their MPs at Westminster. Yet Parliament would continue to have responsibility for what is vital for the United Kingdom — its economic position, its foreign affairs and defence. It would also retain responsibility for the distribution of the proceeds of the Union Exchequer between the parts of Britain. In short, Westminster would remain the centre of power. The proposed parliament in Edinburgh would be just a sop. If you doubt this, ask the senior members of the Labour Party who propose devolution how many of them would wish to serve in Edinburgh rather than at Westminster.

Would devolution increase my sense of being a Scot? No. Would it change Scotland's distinctive legal or educational system for the better? No.

What then of the practical consequences of devolution? What the Scottish convention proposes is a separate, single-chamber parliament with tax-raising powers, able to legislate on virtually everything except what is really important for the United Kingdom. This raises three huge practical issues.

First, the West Lothian question — so-called because it was first asked by Tam Dalyell, the West Lothian MP — about the role of Scottish Members at Westminster if there were a separate Scottish parliament. If English and Welsh MPs had no say in exclusively Scottish matters, why should Scottish MPs be allowed to vote on English or Welsh matters?

Some constitutional radicals pretend to solve the West Lothian question simply by ignoring it. The Opposition, with greater intellectual honesty, recognises that the question exists, and seeks to answer it by proposing English regional assemblies. This only equates Scotland with an English region. But in any event, the proposal for regional assemblies is a plant without roots.

Are the Union and its institutions to be sacrificed for an unconsidered, unwanted patchwork of federalism? So the West Lothian question remains unanswered.

What of a Scottish parliament's tax-raising powers? Some argue that these need not be exercised. Then why propose them? To increase taxes uniquely in Scotland would, I believe, be profoundly bad for Scotland. But in the unlikely event of the powers being used to lower taxes, constitutional as well as economic issues would arise. Government expenditure in Scotland is nearly one-third higher per capita than that of England. How long would English MPs continue to vote more money to Scotland than to their own constituents, only to see it used to fund tax cuts north of the border?

A tax-raising Scottish parliament would soon be in permanent confrontation with Westminster. Break-up of the United Kingdom would then be but a step away. The devolutionists suggest that disputes would be resolved by judicial or appellate committees. Better, surely, to avoid creating the disputes in the first place. From my position in the judiciary, I doubt whether this would bring government closer to the people, or make it more responsive. A field day for the lawyers would be a bad day for representative democracy.

Our living constitution may look untidy, but like the Wynds in the old parts of Scotland's towns it is homey. It is ours, and it has grown through our history. It may need some repair and renovation, but how much finer and closer to us it is than the soulless constitutional tower blocks with which the radical reformers would replace it.

Scotland is equated with an English region

Don't we just love being in control?

British Gas

Half a league backward

Education rankings are a pretence, not an honest way to improve teaching

Why is the Government stopping at primary school league tables? Why does it not go further to card their paperwork into the nation's schoolrooms. They recently sent 25,000 schools a 23-item survey featuring such questions as "What are the similarities and differences between social and moral development?" Small wonder they were too busy trying to teach.

I am sure the professional audit has its uses. I like to know that my doctor, lawyer, accountant or bank manager has qualifications, operates according to rules and is up-to-date in his or her knowledge. I take residual comfort from the deterrent value of negligence law. With schools there is little such reassurance, and teachers' associations have never bothered themselves with professional standards. Teachers are not "struck off" by their peers. Too rarely are they sacked by their employers. Hence the need for an inspectorate.

Yet an audit should convey meaning. Parents need to know what is going on inside a school, and that it lives up to some professional standard. In cities, where parental choice is feasible, some means of comparing adjacent schools helps both choice and monitoring, especially where there is no good reason for a wide variation in performance. To be known as the worst school in town might lead governors and the local authority to take remedial action. Devastating though it must be to the morale of staff, parents and children, all of this is to be overwhelmed by a national league table. Such tables may be of use in the case of private boarding schools. For local day schools they are mere Whitehall games. They cannot compare like with like, or measure a school's real achievement in responding to the challenge of its neighbourhood. They are an institutional beauty parade, reducing education to the level of a Eurovision Song Contest.

The Woodhead/Shepherd thesis is that a bad professional — in this case a head teacher — is best improved by being publicly humiliated. A recent report by the Royal Statistical Society dismissed such league table comparisons as meaningless. Researchers pointed out that few schools have enough pupils for annual data to be reliably comparable. A flu epidemic can alter a national ranking by a hundred places. Primary schools are even smaller institutions. I cannot believe a reputable statistician would go near an attempt at a national tabulation.

As for yesterday's lumping of good and bad together to validate a welter of gloomy generalisations about national standards, the result is equally unhelpful to individual schools. It is like the Board of Trade announcing that 40 per cent of British companies "could do better" or that one in five is "disturbingly weak". A measure of the quality of this exercise is the unsurprising discovery by the inspectors that two-thirds of schools measured as "outstanding" have a selective intake at 11. As a piece of social science, this ranks with discovering that three-star restaurants serve remarkably good food or that the rich have lots of money.

Professional league tables are now sprawling across the public sector. They have crept into hospital waiting lists, child mortality figures, crime records, police clear-up rates, 999-call response times, university research output, courtroom efficiency and Royal Family engagements. They arise from a legitimate search for value for money, but rely only on "value" that can be calibrated. Such old-fashioned professional inputs as trust, care, reassurance, time spent listening and the creation of confidence are not measurable. Nor is such a result as a healthy, alert or well-educated person. In a league table culture, only what is measurable counts.

This is government by exhortation. I suppose the pillory had its uses in the Middle Ages, as had the ducking-stool. Not many drowned. During China's Cultural Revolution, any teacher who deviated from a national norm was forced to wear a dunce cap and stand penitently in a public place. Students of the Great Terror know that a proletarian likes nothing so much as a profession in a state of ridicule. To politicians, the nomination of the "best and worst schools in Britain" is the least-cost way of appearing to be doing something.

If the Government response were to devote money and care to helping the "worst", there might be a justification for this crudity. But the whole drift of yesterday's announcement was that the quality of a school depends solely on good teaching as assessed in government tests. Thus, Crofton Junior School in Orpington, was said to excel — almost twice the national average score at English — because of the organisation of its teaching. This is the latest orthodoxy. Everybody can see that Crofton excels principally because it is middle-class, all-white and in Orpington, not Southwark. And nobody dares say so.

I am mystified at what purpose is served by the new political correctness. League tables are about rewarding success and punishing failure, but the concept of success and failure that they inculcate is naïve. To all criticism of league tables, Mrs Shepherd and her officials reply not that they are valid but that they are "popular". So is the Eurovision contest. True, tables get easy coverage. Readers enjoy marvelling at success and gloating over failure. But such pulp fiction is not usually part of the public service mission. We expect policy to be directed at improving the quality of a service overall.

If subsidy is needed, it should be directed especially at families least able to help themselves. But I cannot imagine a more crass way of crushing their self-esteem and that of their children than a national league table of primary schools. Perhaps the poor have had their day. But the Tory party's contempt for their future schooling must be redressed. As a victim said of J.B. Priestley's famous inspector, "I remember how he looked and what he made me feel: fire and blood and anguish."

Simon Jenkins

Don't call us

UPROAR IN the world of easy listening: a hoaxer has been trying to bump off Radio 2's disc jockeys.

The individual, who clearly harbours a bizarre vendetta against certain celebrity voices, has caused panic by spreading rumours that presenters have expired.

Three times recently the man has set up an elaborate web of lies to persuade newspapers and TV companies that a particular presenter has died. Radio 2, with a line-up that includes Terry Wogan, Jimmy Young, and the linguistically-challenged Derek Jameson, refuses to confirm the identity of the targeted broadcasters.

The caller's tactics vary, but this week he rang a newspaper and pretended to be an agent, offering obituary details and bursting into tears for extra effect.

"The hoaxer seems to have a very detailed knowledge of how news organisations work," says a BBC spokesman. "He seems to be very calculated in causing as much distress as possible. It is very chilling. This is not a joke. It is the act of a very sick individual."

● Kenneth Clarke and Peter Lilley gave simultaneous speeches at the London School of Economics yesterday. The Social Security Secretary, who was pelted with flour and eggs on his last visit, gave a well-publicised talk to the Conservative Association and was heckled on his way in. The Chancellor's address to the Centre for Economic Performance, however, was private and discreet and he was untroubled. "I call the Social Security Secretary my human shield," said Clarke cheerfully.

Ure mistake

THE MISERY continues for Yorkshire Water. Now they are running scared of the Devil. Richmondshire District Council has ordered them to pull down a bridge over the River Ure in Wensleydale built as part of plans to extract water. The official reason is that planning permission had not been sought. However, locals claim the council is heeding their warnings about disturbing Beelzebub. According to folklore, bridges over the river failed to stay up until the devil agreed a pact with villagers in the 12th century. He ate a farmer's dog in return for building the bridge.

"He left one stone missing, saying that if ever it should be completed he would eat the locals," says Jacqueline Wells, a parish councillor. "We told Yorkshire Water that if they ever completed their bridge the wrath of the Devil would be unleashed. Now they are removing it."

All change

A CERTAIN amount of regrouping among the cast of the rugby show The Changing Room which kicks off in the West End tonight. One of the stars, David Michaels, who was to play the part of the full back, was being operated on yesterday for a broken leg. He had picked up the injury while playing soccer.

The incident occurred when Michaels turned out for the National Theatre's side, Teatro Nazionale, in a Sunday league match. "The chap who was playing the reserve has been brought in to shore up the side at fullback and the understudy is now first reserve," says a spokesman.

Exit, Paxo

JEREMY PAXMAN made an early departure from the Oldie of the Year award ceremony in London. It was a pity, really, for the Wannabe

Mrs Merton: golden oldie

Oldie of the Year award went to Caroline Hook, more commonly known as the northern housewife with a perm, the television chat-show host and recent Times columnist Mrs Merton.

As Ned Sherrin introduced the Merton faux naïf interviewing style he explained that it was not abrasive: "No Paxman assault from her." Nevertheless, her technique is not something that Paxo appreciates himself — last year he refused an invitation to appear on her show.

● Cedric Brown was curiously camera-shy yesterday. After his news conference, from which TV cameras were banned, he rushed to hide in a side room, before being coaxed out for undignified interrogation in a corridor.

Wicket maiden

THE troubled cricket World Cup may survive until its opening ceremony in Calcutta on Sunday but now even that event is the subject of controversy. Local politicians are bowling bouncers at the ceremony organisers over plans for what they argue is a suggestive strip-show.

Sushmita Sen, a former Miss Universe and a heroine in the city, is scheduled to appear wearing scarf-sized national flags of the 12 participating countries, which she will then peel off and hand to team captains.

Sushmita: no flagging

Protestations from organisers that she will be decent underneath have fallen on deaf ears. "What is planned is totally vulgar," said Samar Chakraborty, a Congress leader in Calcutta. Police expect excited crowds. "The World Cup has enough problems and we don't want another controversy," says a senior officer.

P.H.S

Rifkind should beware

Don't pander to the sceptics, says

Sir Leon Brittan

Last year there was an increasing realisation on both sides of the Atlantic that the relationship between Europe and the United States remained the most important relationship for each party, but that recent developments, such as the end of the Cold War and the successful Gatt negotiation, made its modernisation essential.

As European Commissioner in charge of relations with America, I put to the Commission and the Council of Ministers last summer a proposal that the EU and the US should launch a major initiative to strengthen ties in a whole range of policies. This was warmly welcomed by the Americans, and after months of negotiation the initiative was crowned in Madrid last December, when President Clinton joined the EU in signing the blueprint for this new relationship.

Throughout the process, the Commission worked closely with the Spanish presidency and was bolstered by valuable support from Britain, Germany and others who see transatlantic ties as vital to their national interests. The Commission is now pressing ahead with a similar initiative towards Canada.

There can be few European policies which dovetail so neatly with British interests. Most significantly of all, the initiative has kept alive the flame of freer trade across the Atlantic — which is very dear to Britain. It does not create a full free trade area, but if, after a joint study by the Commission and the American Government, it is deemed politically, economically and legally feasible to cut all tariffs, a free trade area could ultimately result.

So far so good. A substantial advance in transatlantic relations, one of Britain's major foreign policy objectives, has been achieved by the European Union with no help from the anti-European tub-thumpers in Westminster, but with great support from the British Government. It has been achieved by making friends and influencing people in Europe. That is proof, if proof were needed, that a positive attitude to Europe pays far more dividends than the penny-wise and pound-foolish approach of defending "national sovereignty" at all costs.

Britain on its own could not have achieved this major step. But by joining with EU partners who share Britain's priorities, effective action was possible. This illustrates the point made by Raymond Setz, former American Ambassador in London, that Britain can maximise its influence on America by working through Europe. The realistic choice for Britain is not between America and Europe. It is, rather, between seeming semi-detached from and hostile to Europe — as the Euro-sceptics wish — and being positive towards Europe and therefore influential in strengthening the transatlantic relationship. If Britain wants to go further, as the Foreign Secretary's most welcome speech yesterday suggests, it must persuade its EU partners that free trade with America is in their interest too. The Euro-American initiative proposed by Brussels and backed by all 15 EU countries shows that in advocating closer relations Britain is pushing at a door already two-thirds open.

That door will open wider only if others feel that Britain wants to strengthen rather than dilute Europe by removing more barriers to trade with America. In my view, persuading them of this is perfectly possible, provided that the Foreign Secretary's positive approach is not distorted by those wishing to misrepresent it as giving encouragement to Euro-sceptics who wish to detach Britain from Europe. These objectives can be achieved only through Europe.

The same applies to the removal of economic barriers worldwide. Europe as a whole, negotiating as a single unit, has opened far more world markets than any one country could have done on its own, as even the most blinkered sceptic would be hard pushed to deny. The biggest bonfire of trade barriers that the world has ever known was ignited by Brussels through Gatt, with the support of Britain and other countries. Those who had blocked the deal in the past were won over because the advocates of free trade convinced them that Europe would be stronger in the world as a result. And hard though it is for Euro-sceptics to swallow, the European Commission was the toughest advocate of them all.

The British people are told by much of the media to see every policy emanating from across the Channel as threatening our right to govern ourselves, not as a chance to boost our influence. The development of Europe's relationship with America shows how untrue this is. This Government must show that such fears are unfounded, and must highlight the benefits of EU membership. It has chosen to do so in its reaction to the new era in Euro-American relations, and wisely so. It must apply the same approach elsewhere, weighing up every issue in the balance of British interests, rather than heeding those who cry "Save our sovereignty" whenever anything comes from Brussels, however much it may be in Britain's and Europe's interest.

GREAT SCOTT

Prepare for a blinding blizzard of claim and counter-claim

Today or tomorrow, an enormous tome will thud onto selected ministers' desks. Two years later, the report by Sir Richard Scott into government policy on arms sales to Iraq is finally complete. The coming days will be dominated by the release of the Scott report, by selective leaks, alleged leaks and strategies for defence, attack and survival.

Readers may be forgiven if they have forgotten what it is about and why it is important. In a sentence, ministers stand accused of misleading Parliament about the sale of military equipment to Iraq and of trying to keep secret evidence that would have prevented directors of the Matrix Churchill company being unjustly sent to jail. The issue is not the rightness or wrongness of government export policy, but the uses and abuses of official secrecy. The charge against the Government is that in the name of the public interest, it resorted to measures aimed at avoiding political embarrassment.

Politicians are gripped by how they can control the consequences of this inquiry. Top of John Major's priorities is the avoidance of a ministerial resignation. Stung by Tony Blair's recent accusation that he buckles under pressure, he will do all in his power to keep the two most vulnerable ministers, William Waldegrave and Sir Nicholas Lyell, in their posts. If he manages to do so, he hopes he will be judged as vindicated by Sir Richard. If he does not, Labour will jubilantly claim its own victory.

To this end, the Government seems prepared to use every power at its disposal. One of these is the ability to control the report's publication schedule. For those politicians whose careers are on the line, the defence strategy can begin in earnest tomorrow. For other parties to the issue, lawyers, the unjustly accused and the pressure groups for civil liberties, the wait will be longer. Ministers will have a languid week in which to reflect upon Scott's findings and prepare their soundbites. They have allowed no such luxury to anyone else.

Journalists and opposition MPs will have, instead, a scant hour or two late on February 15 to digest a 2,000-page document and pass their first (and, from the Government's point of view, most significant) judgment upon its implications. This may seem a small matter — of concern chiefly to newspapers. But it is also one of the instruments of control that the Government is prepared to use against a report which it commissioned three years ago but would rather it had not. A machine wedded to secrecy is being used against a judge appointed to examine the harmful consequences of that very addition.

For journalists and opposition spokesmen to absorb 2,000 pages and form a lasting judgment upon them takes longer than half an afternoon. Yet the reaction that readers will find in Friday week's newspapers and the instant attack that Labour will be expected to mount will necessarily be upon the basis of a hurried reading of the report.

The summary that will accompany the findings will have been drafted by the Government, not by the author. It will be all too easy to highlight passages that exonerate ministers and to pass over those that do not. When the Franks Committee reported on the events leading up to the Falklands conflict, great initial attention was drawn to the one paragraph in the conclusion — quite at variance with the rest of the report — that portrayed government actions in a rosy light. Inevitably this tended to colour the coverage of the findings.

Journalists will obviously do their best to avoid being "spun" by spokesmen of all the groups involved. They have been warned of what to expect by Lord Howe's attempts to smear the character of Sir Richard and the terms of his inquiry. They will try not to allow the selective leaks that will undoubtedly appear between now and next Thursday to influence their final judgment.

Ministers should be clear, however, that the full judgment on Scott will not be complete by Friday morning, and the fate of ministers will not be determined by Friday week's headlines. The influence of the report upon the conduct of government will go further than the achievement or avoidance of a ministerial resignation. The Scott report will shine a light into Whitehall cellars that have never before been illuminated. The consequences will take time to emerge.

WISE VIRGINS

The Age of Innocence is getting shorter

Not so very long ago the problems pages of magazines targeted at teenage girls offered advice on acne creams and that first kiss. Now they are more likely to discuss contraceptive pills and that first night. The Tory MP Peter Luff tried yesterday to limit the access of adolescents to explicit material in magazines by introducing a ten-minute rule Bill in the Commons. It is unlikely that the Bill will pass into law, and even less likely that legislation would achieve his aims, but Mr Luff's ten minutes have not been in vain. Exploiting adolescent sexuality for money is an ugly business and it needs to be fought.

It is impossible to ignore the curiosity about sex among teenagers and naïve to imagine that their magazines could avoid exploring emotions. Indeed, given the embarrassment some parents feel, magazines could play a part in educating teenagers and encouraging responsibility. But few seem inclined to preach the virtues of restraint.

More, with a significant readership under 16, prints a new sexual position for its readers to try every fortnight. Looks carries a feature on "Pillow-play". TV Hits advises a reader who inquires about oral sex to "lie back and enjoy it". The magazines may insert warnings, but readers are left with the impression that most girls of their age are already sexually active. Peer pressure is insidious at any time, but few are more vulnerable than adolescents. Fashion matters to teenagers and in these magazines chastity has all the allure of a ra-ra skirt.

Fashion magazines have already played a part in blighting the lives of many young women by draping the most attractive of clothes on surreally thin models. The dominance of this skewed notion of beauty has coincided with a worrying increase in the number of young women with dietary disorders. How much more irresponsible is it to encourage a hedonistic attitude to sex when teenage pregnancies are still too high and evidence strongly suggests that early sexual activity increases the risk of cervical cancer?

Mr Luff, like many parents, was shocked to see just how explicit were the magazines his ten-year-old daughter read. His Bill would lead publishers to print the approved age range of a magazine's readership on the front cover to protect the innocent. Sadly, his measure would probably prove counter-productive. Branding a magazine "adults only" gives it all the allure of the forbidden. The answer is not the heavy hand of statute but closer parental control and an honest searching of editorial consciences.

Parents should make it clear that new sexual positions are not suitable reading matter for girls under 16, reassure their daughters that they are in the majority if they wait, and warn them of the real dangers of early experimentation. Editors and proprietors should ask themselves how happy they are to bid for pocket money by promising sex. They have a duty of care to their readers as much as their marketing departments. They should tread more warily.

COLOMBIA'S 'CALIGATE'

President Samper should now prepare for departure

"Renuncie, Samper!" — "Resign, Samper!" — is a cry now heard across Colombia. The country is still old-fashioned, so the cry is always made in the polite form of the imperative: but as the clamour grows daily more impassioned, the position of the man who is the focus of this ire has become indefensible. Ernesto Samper, Colombia's President, may soon face impeachment by his country's Congress. He stands accused of having accepted, in his presidential campaign in 1994, millions of dollars in donations from the Cali drugs cartel. Judicial officers, acting with integrity and courage, will soon pass the results of their investigations to a congressional committee. Since Señor Samper's Liberal Party enjoys a majority in both parliamentary houses, he may yet salvage his much-tarnished political career. That, however, would be a shame for Colombia, and the least satisfactory end to the sordid affair.

The evidence in the public domain is so far inconclusive. But there is no question that Señor Samper has lost the confidence of the electorate. Key ministers and ambassadors have resigned. Both the treasurer and the manager of his election campaign are in prison. When the latter stated recently that the President knew of the tainted source of much of his campaign money — which the President immediately, and strongly, denied — nationwide polls revealed that few were prepared to believe Señor Samper.

The evaporation of confidence has not occurred in Colombia alone: there has, for months now, been an almost total collapse in relations between the American Administration and the Samper Government. The activities of the Drug Enforcement Administration, and the extent of Colombian collaboration in the fight against the narco-traficantes, have suffered as a result of "Caligate".

Colombia's people could have to pay a hefty price for Señor Samper's refusal to step down. On March 1, the American administration is due to announce its annual "certification" of countries engaged in the battle against drugs. This brings all sorts of benefits to the certified country, most importantly a large package of American aid and a preferential tariff rate for the export to the US of a range of goods. Last year, Colombia received only a "conditional" certification, based on "American national security interests". But the conclusion was then recorded that Colombia's fight against drug-traffickers was less than wholehearted.

An adverse decision by the US in March would not be without its risks: anti-American feeling in Colombia, now dormant, may be rekindled. Señor Samper, if still in office, would be ill-advised to make populist capital out of Washington's censure. Worryingly, he has not often spurned a populist trick: only last month he sought to circumvent the judicial process by calling for a referendum on his fitness for office. That will not happen, of course, as the rule of law is still held in esteem by Colombians. Señor Samper, however, is not. He should find another job.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

1 Pennington Street, London E1 9AN Telephone 0171-762 5000

Preserving the Kohl convoy from shots across the bows

From Mr Michael Welsh

Sir, The Euro-sceptics' advocacy of the indiscriminate use of the British veto at the forthcoming inter-governmental conference, such as that put forward by William Cash in his letter of January 27, reveals their intellectual bankruptcy.

As Chancellor Kohl made clear at Leuven last week (report, February 3), our European partners are determined to press ahead to closer integration because they believe that their national interest requires it; it would be neither morally acceptable nor politically wise for Britain to use her veto to frustrate the wishes of 14 other sovereign states.

The last person to attempt this kind of bullying was General de Gaulle in 1965. After nine months of the "empty chair", he was forced to back down because the other member states realised that the Community could not work if one member required its national interest to prevail over all the others.

If our Government attempted to follow his example the leaders of the European convoy might well come to the conclusion that it was not worth jeopardising the entire fleet for the sake of one recalcitrant member who refused to keep on station. Willing and active co-operation between independent sovereign states can work only if there is an underlying willingness to co-operate.

While the Atlantic Alliance has triumphantly seen off the Soviet threat, the European Community has neutralised the aggressive nationalism that has disfigured so much of our common history by making war between the partners impossible. Most Europeans rightly value this achievement, and they are not likely to allow the British to undermine the process that has made it possible.

Yours faithfully,
MICHAEL WELSH
(Chief Executive),
Action Centre for Europe Limited,
181 Town Lane, Whittle Le Woods,
Chorley, Lancashire,
February 5.

From Sir Anthony Meyer

Sir, There are valid arguments for relaxing some of the Maastricht criteria for European monetary union, and even for postponing it: and these are quite fairly set out in your leading article of February 5, "A heavy tread".

However, the Germans and others are rightly suspicious of such advice coming from those who have not only been the slowest in the convoy, but have boasted of their slowness; and they are equally right to insist that the European single market will remain precarious until it has monetary stability.

When Chancellor Kohl warns that nationalism means war, he is not overlooking the fact that it was NATO which averted a war with the Soviet Union; he is reminding us that it has been the European Community principle of pooled sovereignty which has imposed restraint on its member states, and that if this principle is rejected there is a very real danger that governments in both Eastern and Western Europe will feel compelled to protect their vital economic and political interests by all means, including force.

I am, etc.
ANTHONY MEYER,
European Movement — UK,
11 Tufnell Street, SW1,
February 5.

From Mr Ian Curteis

Sir, In his speech invoking the possibilities of war if the rest of us fail to conform to the sort of Europe Germany wants Chancellor Kohl once more misuses the word "nationalism".

Nationalism is the sense of nationhood, no more and no less. It is as natural and healthy an instinct to a citizen of any country as the sense of belonging to the unit of a family is to children. To imply that there is something sinister and retrogressive about it, and that a nation is really no more than an administrative unit, flies in the face of two thousand years of European art and literature and all we know about the human psyche.

To ignore nationalism is not only foolish, it is dangerous — as the bloody reversion of the nations press-ganged to make up the artificial USSR, and the artificial Yugoslavia, shows so clearly. To attempt to build a new Europe by suppressing it is like designing a house which ignores the forces of gravity, and the result would be the same.

Yours truly,
IAN CURTEIS,
The Mill House, Coin St Aldwyns,
Cirencester, Gloucestershire,
February 5.

From Mr P. A. Rawlings

Sir, How little we learn from history. Today you quote Chancellor Kohl as saying that "the slowest ship in the convoy [Britain] should not be allowed to determine the speed". Perhaps he should be reminded that the convoy system was developed to combat German aggression (ie, the U-boat threat) and only worked because the convoy did travel at the speed of the slowest ship.

Yours faithfully,
P. A. RAWLINGS,
6 School Road,
Sible Hedingham, Halstead, Essex,
February 3.

From Mr Laurence Cottrell

Sir, Herr Kohl takes his evident aversion to militarism a bit far when he transfers an old cavalry metaphor to the high seas as "the slowest ship in the convoy should not be allowed to determine its speed".

This transfer is the more remarkable when one considers that the original concept is often attributed to, among others, his countryman, General von Seydlitz (1721-83): "the speed of a cavalry charge is the speed of the slowest horse".

Yours faithfully,
LAURENCE COTTRELL,
121 St Paul's Wood Hill,
St Pauls Cray, Kent,
February 3.

Electoral reform

From the Reverend David Mason,
Chairman of the Electoral Reform Society

Sir, The single transferable vote would not have the effect on British politics that Anthony Howard has claimed ("Hemsworth, PK and the lessons for new Labour", February 3). The experience with STV in Ireland is that it does not lead to a great proliferation of parties and a party would need around 15 per cent of the vote to be elected in a constituency.

The alternative vote which he proposes is not a proportional system. If you look to the example of the 1990 general election in Australia, where it is used, it led to the Liberal/National coalition, with more votes getting fewer seats than the Labour opposition.

The British university seats, until 1990, used the single transferable vote, not the alternative vote, in two or three-member, though not, of course, single-member seats.

It is up to the British people to decide on the type of democracy they want in a referendum, not for politicians to decide for them behind closed doors.

Yours sincerely,
DAVID MASON,
Chairman,
Electoral Reform Society,
6 Channel Street, Blackfriars, SE1,
February 5.

Wolves in the wild

From Nicholas Wilski

Sir, I read with great interest Jim Crumley's article (Weekend, January 27; see also letter, February 2) about a project to bring back to the Scottish Highlands animals such as wolves, beavers and lynx.

My father is Polish and we often go on holiday to the Tatra mountains where wolves, bears, lynx and wild boar still live in the wild. It makes the pine forests of Poland so much more exciting to think that those dangerous and menacing animals are there.

I think that it is a very good idea to make the Scottish forests also exciting. Yours etc.
NICHOLAS WILSKI (aged 11),
Claremont CP School,
Banner Farm Road,
Tumbridge Wells, Kent,
February 2.

From Mr John Gudgeon

Sir, Mr Roger Panaman, who writes to you (February 2) on behalf of the Carnivore Wildlife Trust, himself appears to live in Oxfordshire.

In view of his comments on the diversity of the wolf's habitat, may one ask why no one seems to be proposing to reintroduce the animal there, specifically Church Street, Kidlington?

Yours truly,
JOHN GUDGEON,
2 Clackclose Road,
Downham Market, Norfolk,
February 2.

Business letters, page 29

Letters should carry a daytime telephone number. They may be faxed to 0171-762-5046.

Averting a catastrophe in Burundi

From Mr Tony Cunningham, MEP for Cumbria and Lancashire North (Socialist Group (Labour))

Sir, The international community was too late to avert catastrophe in Rwanda. When the media finally started covering the genocide, it was too late for international peacekeepers to act. UN troops were sitting in their barracks watching the massacre, able to do nothing because they had no mandate to act. Millions had died before the international community was ready to react.

We now know that a similar situation is just waiting to happen in Burundi. Members of the European Parliament heard on January 30 in Brussels that tension is mounting in the country. There are two million refugees and displaced people. The capital, Bujumbura, is now a Tutsi city. It used to be a mixed city of Hutu and Tutsi. Ethnic cleansing has already taken place. The Government has asked some non-governmental organisations to leave Burundi.

The European Union, the Organisation for African Unity, the UN and NGOs all want to do something to help. But a lack of co-ordination is hindering humanitarian efforts. Of the possibility of sending peacekeeping troops into Burundi, Emma Bonino, the European Commissioner in charge of humanitarian affairs, told Members of the European Parliament that the EU's efforts are severely limited by its lack of a common foreign policy.

The EU is spending half a million dollars a day in the central lakes region on humanitarian aid. But keeping people alive in the short term will not solve the long-term problems. The international institutions need to devise mechanisms to allow them to help prevent economic and ethnic tensions from escalating into civil war and genocide. In the short term they must act to diffuse the potential for genocide.

Yours faithfully,
TONY CUNNINGHAM
(European Labour Party's Spokesperson on Development),
European Parliament,
97-113 Rue Belliard,
B-1047 Brussels,
February 6.

University funding

From Mrs Kimberley Jordan Reeman

Sir, Higher education is not and never has been free in Canada, or in the United States, nor has anyone ever suggested or expected it to be. (February 2). Students pay a yearly tuition fee in addition to paying for their books and accommodation.

If required, financial assistance is available in the form of repayable grants, or, for the academically outstanding, scholarships. The majority of students work from April to September to finance their education.

This system engenders a certain commitment and maturity among Canadian and American students, who choose university not as a place to waste three government-funded years of their lives, but for the love of knowledge and as preparation for a career.

Higher education is not a right. It is and should be a privilege, for which my generation (I am a 41-year-old Canadian graduate) was paying the equivalent of £300 a year in tuition fees twenty years ago.

Yours,
KIMBERLEY JORDAN REEMAN,
Blue Posts,
Eaton Park Road,
Cobham, Surrey,
January 30.

Instant off-pit

From Mr Robert Garwood

Sir, I had reason to ring the British Gas inquiry line today. Perhaps in view of its record on customer complaints it carried a recorded message: "Thank you for calling. All our staff are currently attending an important briefing. Please call back later."

Yours truly,
R. GARWOOD,
60 Kirby Drive,
Barton Hills,
Luton, Bedfordshire,
February 6.

'Forums' needed for pop composers

From Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber

Sir, I am sorry that I did not make entirely clear to your Arts Correspondent what I feel about contemporary pop (report, January 29; letters, February 5). For more than a decade, I and others have been trying to create forums for the discovery of new composers. This is why I support the National Youth Music Theatre, with two clear objectives. First, to encourage the NYMT's wonderful group of performers, and secondly to bring to the attention of the creative world a young and enthusiastic musical theatre group ready, willing and able to perform new works.

When I sponsored the NYMT's visit to Broadway last year, it was to put them under a spotlight — to show just what they could do. They received fabulous reviews and played to full houses, but the lack of coverage of their success in the UK did not encourage young writers to come forward. A full-page advertisement in The New York Times has not yet borne fruit.

Musical theatre badly needs new writers and pop should be one of their influences. However, I continue to feel, from a musical theatre perspective, that the last decade in pop was not very encouraging: it was a pretty barren period melody-wise.

I am not a fan of compilation musicals, but I think it would be very hard to put together a compilation evening of any pop writer from the mid-80s to mid-90s in the way that has been successfully done on Broadway with the songs of, say, Leiber and Stoller in Smokey Joe's Cafe.

However, I totally agree with those who have commented that the pop charts have taken a turn for the better in the last few months. I for one would be very excited if new writers like Noel Gallagher started experimenting in the theatre and I hope that the recent trend, particularly in British pop, continues apace.

Yours faithfully,
ANDREW LLOYD WEBBER,
22 Tower Street, WC2,
February 5.

Welles's whale

From Mr Simon Callow

Sir, It is one thing to be panned in one's lifetime (First night, January 31), quite another to be falsely maligned after one's death, as has happened to poor Orson Welles, who Benedict Nightingale uses as a stick with which to beat me and my production of Les Enfants du Paradis; guilt by association?

Welles did not, as Nightingale alleges, try to put the whale on stage in his 1955 Moby Dick rehearsed at the Duke of York's theatre. It was a notably economical and evocative evening, much admired at the time. Sir Peter Hall still regards it as one of the best productions of his theatre-going life.

Perhaps your critic was thinking of Welles's version of Around the World in Eighty Days. Told by The New York Times that he had put everything in it bar the kitchen sink, Welles repaired the omission the following night by appearing at the curtain call carrying that item of kitchen furniture.

Yours sincerely,
SIMON CALLOW,
c/o Marina Martin Associates,
12-13 Poland Street, W1,
February 2.

Jazz legacy

From Mr Daniel Lightman

Sir, Replying to the assertion by the obituarist of Gerry Mulligan (January 22) that "most great jazz artists have matured only in their fifties", Mr Solomon (letter, January 26) rightly points out that many jazz masters did not even live to the age of 50. He should have added that several of those (few) jazz greats who did survive that long had ceased to make any significant musical contribution many years before they reached 50.

In some cases this was due to ill-health — Buddy Bolden lived to 62 but spent his last two decades in a lunatic asylum; in others, because the public lost interest in music it regarded as outmoded — Jelly Roll Morton's polyphonic sound was no longer appreciated in the big band era; and some — such as Artie Shaw, still alive today at 85 but retired from performing for over 40 years — simply became disillusioned with the jazz world.

Yours faithfully,
DANIEL LIGHTMAN,
5b Prince Arthur Road, NW3.

Cricket commentary

From Mr Najam Butt

Sir, The refusal of the Australian and West Indian cricket teams to take part in the Sri Lanka leg of the World Cup (report, February 6) should be condemned. The organisers should not reschedule the fixtures.

Would these players have considered abandoning an international fixture in England if, say, the IRA had just bombed London? I do not believe so. This appears to be a petty continuation of the bad spirit in which recent matches against Sri Lanka have been played. Remember, the Aussies were threatening to withdraw before last week's bomb in Colombo.

Yours sincerely,
N. BUTT,
41 Jordan Road, Perivale, Middlesex.

Collateral attack on conviction

Smith v Linskill
Before Sir Thomas Bingham, Master of the Rolls, Lord Justice Peter Gibson and Lord Justice Schiemann
[Judgment February 5]

A claim brought by an intending plaintiff against his former solicitors, for alleged negligence in the preparation of his defence to a criminal charge of which he had been convicted, amounted to a collateral attack on the decision in the criminal proceedings.

Since he had been afforded a full opportunity to challenge the criminal charge within those proceedings, and since there was no fresh evidence of so compelling a nature as to require the court to alter the verdict, the court found that the claim was an abuse of the process of the court.

The Court of Appeal so held, dismissing an appeal by Christopher Smith from Mr Justice Peter Gibson's decision (1995) 3 All ER 326, which determined, as a preliminary issue, that his claim could not proceed against the defendant, Julian Linskill, practising as Julian Linskill & Co, for damages for negligence and breach of contract in the preparation of his defence to the criminal charge of aggravated burglary.

Mr Smith had pleaded not guilty but had been convicted at Mold Crown Court in 1984 and sentenced to seven years imprisonment. His application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal, Criminal Division, had been refused on paper by the judge and on renewal before the full court.

Mr Andrew Nicol, QC and Mr Gavin Millar for Mr Smith; Mr Guy Mansfield, QC and Mr Andrew Sander for the defendant firm.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, giving the judgment of the court, said that the leading modern authority on abuse of process in cases such as the present was Hunter v Chief Constable of the West Midlands Police (1982) AC 529, 541, where Lord Diplock had said that what had since been regarded as the governing rule on the subject.

That the abuse of process in such a case was the initiation of proceedings in a court of justice for the purpose of mounting a collateral attack on a final decision against the intending plaintiff which had been made by another court competent to determine the issue in the first instance, in proceedings in which the intending plaintiff had a full opportunity of contesting the decision in the court by which it had been made.

His Lordship said that Mr Smith had certainly initiated the present proceedings and that his conviction in the crown court amounted to a final decision by a court of competent jurisdiction in previous proceedings against him.

The thrust of his case in the present proceedings was that if his criminal defence had been handled with proper care he would not, and should not have been convicted. Thus the soundness or otherwise of his conviction was an issue at the heart of the present proceedings.

Were he to recover substantial damages it could only be on the basis that he should not have been convicted. Even if he established negligence he could recover no more than nominal damages if the court were to conclude that, even if his case had been handled with proper care, he would still have been convicted.

It followed that the present proceedings did involve a collateral attack on the decision of the crown court.

It was not the intention of the House of Lords in Hunter's case to lay down an inflexible rule to be applied willy-nilly to all cases which might arguably be said to fall within it.

Lord Diplock had been at pains to emphasise the need for flexibility and the exercise of judgment: see Walpole v Partridge & Wilson (1994) QB 106, 116 per Lord Justice Ralph Gibson, that there were at least exceptions to the principle.

It was none the less noteworthy that in McLennan v Chief Constable of the West Midlands (1980) QB 283, 333 Lord Justice Goff, whose judgment was unreservedly approved by the House of Lords, expressed the opinion that to allow re-litigation of an issue which had previously been the subject of final decision "must prima facie be an abuse of the privilege of the court".

The court rejected Mr Nicol's argument that Mr Smith had not had a full opportunity of contesting the decision in the first court because the defendant's negligence had prevented him from deploying his full case.

The court considered that that argument was founded on a misunderstanding of what Lord Diplock had meant. It was plain from his speech in Hunter (at p542) that he was giving his ruling with reference to both civil and criminal cases.

It was evident in civil cases particularly that a party might lack any opportunity to resist a hostile claim, as where judgment was entered against him for procedural default, or might lack a full opportunity, as where summary judgment was given against him.

The court understood Lord Diplock to have been intending to preserve a party's right to make a collateral attack on a decision made against him in such circumstances.

Having reviewed the opportunity afforded to Mr Smith in the handling of his defence and appeal, including the setting of grounds of appeal which drew attention to some at least of his complaints about his solicitor's handling of the case, the court concluded that, even if it were true that valid criticism could have been made, it was impossible to hold that he had lacked a full opportunity to contest the charge.

Were that the correct meaning of the rule, then the rule itself would be virtually meaningless, since it was hard to imagine a case where a convicted defendant could not find some plausible ground on which to criticise his solicitor's preparation of the defence.

The court also rejected Mr Nicol's submission, seeking to distinguish Hunter's case, that the present proceedings were an abuse of process because it had not been found that Mr Smith's real purpose was to attack his conviction; his only and genuine purpose being to recover damages for professional negligence.

It was true that Lord Diplock had (at p541) attached considerable significance to the plaintiff's ulterior purpose in that case.

The court had no doubt but that the existence of such an ulterior purpose provided a strong and additional ground for holding proceedings to be an abuse.

But such an ulterior purpose was not, in its judgment, a necessary ingredient of abuse: see Walpole's case (at p120). The rule rested on public policy the basis of which was the undesirable effect of re-litigating issues such as the present.

The court could not see how those undesirable effects were mitigated by the motive of the intending plaintiff to recover damages rather than simply to establish the unsoundness of the earlier decision.

It was plain from Hunter's case (at p543), that the existence at the commencement of the civil action of fresh evidence obtained since the criminal trial might justify making an exception to the general rule.

It was also plain that the test to be met by such evidence was stricter than the ordinary Court of Appeal test: see Ladd v Marshall (1954) 1 WLR 1489, 1491. It had to be such as "entirely changes the aspect of the case": see Phosphate Fertilisers Ltd v Molleson (1979) 1 App Cas 801, 814 and Hunter v Chief Constable of West Midlands Police (1982) AC 529, 545.

The court referred to evidence said by Mr Nicol to fall within that test and concluded that there was none which brought Mr Smith within measurable distance of satisfying it.

The main considerations of public policy which underlay the existing rule were threefold:

1 The affront to any coherent system of justice which had necessarily to arise if there subsisted two final but inconsistent decisions of courts of competent jurisdiction.

Such would be the case here if there were subsisting decisions of the crown court, that Mr Smith was beyond reasonable doubt guilty of aggravated burglary and, of the civil court, that if his defence had been properly prepared he would and should have been acquitted.

No reasonable observer could view that outcome with equanimity.

The court could not shut its eyes to the possibility that a criminal defendant might be wrongly convicted, perhaps because his defence had been ineptly prepared or conducted.

When that occurred there were two possible solutions: one, to relax the present restraint on seeking to establish the injustice by civil action; the second, which had been favoured over the past century, was to ensure that in appropriate cases the conviction could itself be reviewed, by giving a right of appeal; by providing a relatively low standard for the admission of fresh evidence on appeal; by empowering the appellate court to order a new trial; by giving the Home Secretary power to refer a case back to the Court of Appeal; and by proposals to establish a new review body.

2 The virtual impossibility of fairly re-trying at a later date the issue before the court on the earlier occasion.

3 The importance of finality in litigation. The present rule had been seen by some as a rule invented by judges to protect their professional brethren.

It was of course true that no one welcomed a negligence claim against him, but the manner in which the present rule was applied, as a rule of English law, and nothing, on one view, could better serve the personal interests of the legal profession than endless re-litigation of the same issues.

But the view had long been taken that a final decision should, save in special circumstances, be final. Those broad considerations of public policy remained compelling. Even if it were open to the court to vary the general rule propounded in the Hunter case, it would not feel justified in doing so.

Solicitors: Strain Kerley & Co, Weightman Rutherford, Liverpool.

William Boyer (Transport Ltd v Secretary of State for the Environment and Another)
Before Lord Justice Stuart-Smith, Lord Justice Evans and Lord Justice Roch
[Judgment February 6]

The meaning of enforcement action "taken or purported to [have] taken]" within the meaning of section 171B(4)(b) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, as inserted by section 4 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, within the previous four years had to be ascertained, or purported action, which itself was valid under the ten-year provisions in section 171B(3), or which was within the four-year extension after such a notice given by section 171B(4)(b).

The Court of Appeal so held in an appeal brought by the Secretary of State for the Environment from the decision of Mr Jeremy Sullivan, QC, sitting as a deputy judge of the Queen's Bench Division, on November 22, 1994, holding that two enforcement notices served by Hounslow London Borough Council were out of time and should be quashed.

Mr Richard Drabble, QC and Mr Ian Albutt for the secretary of state; Mr Duncan Ouseley, QC and Mr Timothy Corner for William Boyer (Transport) Ltd.

LORD JUSTICE EVANS said that the enforcement notices related to alleged breaches of planning controls which commenced after the end of 1963 but before July 1982. The latter was relevant date if the ten-year limitation period and associated provisions introduced by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

The Planning and Compensation Act 1991 (Commencement No 5 and Transitional Provisions) Order (SI 1991 No 2405) introduced transitional provisions which were relied upon in the present case.

Article 5(2) made reference to section 171B(4)(b) of the 1991 Act, which permitted the issue of a further enforcement notice within a period of four years following an earlier notice, if the first notice proved invalid or was withdrawn.

The complication regarding further notices lay at the heart of the present case, because both the notices in question were further notices issued on August 19, 1993, after earlier notices which were issued on July 24, 1992, three days before the transitional provision ceased to have effect, were withdrawn.

Mr Drabble submitted that the first notices, notified in section 171B(3) provided an enforcement notice from being issued in respect of a breach after the end of 1963. So the question arose whether subsection 4(b) or the terms of article 5 itself permitted further enforcement action when the original notice was valid, in the sense of not being time barred, not under section 171B but under article 5.

His Lordship would hold not because, for the reason given above, section 171B(4)(b) did not permit further enforcement action unless the original notice was in time under the provisions of that section.

The deputy judge placed emphasis on the policy objectives of the amending provisions of the 1991 Act, and like him his Lordship would regard them as supporting his conclusion that subsection 4(b) did not permit a further notice in the circumstances of the case. But his Lordship would also accept Mr Drabble's submission that that conclusion was not determinative of the correct interpretation of the statutory provisions.

Mr Drabble submitted, finally, that the question whether the further notices were permitted under subsection 4(b) depended upon the validity of the original notice. His Lordship agreed.

But in his Lordship's judgment the subsection operated only when the original notices were not time barred under the provisions of subsection 3, that is, the ten-year limit, and in the present case, they were. Accordingly, the appeal would be dismissed.

Lord Justice Roch delivered a concurring judgment and Lord Justice Stuart-Smith agreed.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor; Bird & Lovibond, Uxbridge.

Planning enforcement action

1982. The latter was relevant date if the ten-year limitation period and associated provisions introduced by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

The Planning and Compensation Act 1991 (Commencement No 5 and Transitional Provisions) Order (SI 1991 No 2405) introduced transitional provisions which were relied upon in the present case.

Article 5(2) made reference to section 171B(4)(b) of the 1991 Act, which permitted the issue of a further enforcement notice within a period of four years following an earlier notice, if the first notice proved invalid or was withdrawn.

The complication regarding further notices lay at the heart of the present case, because both the notices in question were further notices issued on August 19, 1993, after earlier notices which were issued on July 24, 1992, three days before the transitional provision ceased to have effect, were withdrawn.

Mr Drabble submitted that the first notices, notified in section 171B(3) provided an enforcement notice from being issued in respect of a breach after the end of 1963. So the question arose whether subsection 4(b) or the terms of article 5 itself permitted further enforcement action when the original notice was valid, in the sense of not being time barred, not under section 171B but under article 5.

His Lordship would hold not because, for the reason given above, section 171B(4)(b) did not permit further enforcement action unless the original notice was in time under the provisions of that section.

The deputy judge placed emphasis on the policy objectives of the amending provisions of the 1991 Act, and like him his Lordship would regard them as supporting his conclusion that subsection 4(b) did not permit a further notice in the circumstances of the case. But his Lordship would also accept Mr Drabble's submission that that conclusion was not determinative of the correct interpretation of the statutory provisions.

Mr Drabble submitted, finally, that the question whether the further notices were permitted under subsection 4(b) depended upon the validity of the original notice. His Lordship agreed.

But in his Lordship's judgment the subsection operated only when the original notices were not time barred under the provisions of subsection 3, that is, the ten-year limit, and in the present case, they were. Accordingly, the appeal would be dismissed.

Lord Justice Roch delivered a concurring judgment and Lord Justice Stuart-Smith agreed.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor; Bird & Lovibond, Uxbridge.

English cases in The Times Law Report are supplied by barristers of the Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales, 3 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, London, WC2A 3BH. Tel 0171 834 6666; Fax 0171 404 1098.

No false imprisonment case after remand

Hyland v Chief Constable of Lancashire Constabulary
Before Lord Justice Staughton, Lord Justice Ward and Sir Ralph Gibson
[Judgment January 25]

Actions against the police for false imprisonment and breach of statutory duty could not be taken by a detainee for alleged unnecessary detention after he had been remanded to a police station under section 128(7) of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980, as amended by section 48 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

The Court of Appeal so held, allowing an appeal by the defendant, the Chief Constable of Lancashire Constabulary, against the decision of Mr Recorder Morris at Preston County Court on September 27, 1994, that the plaintiff, Francis Charles Hyland, could bring an action against him for false imprisonment and breach of statutory duty. The chief constable's appeal against the decision to give the plaintiff leave to amend his particulars of claim to include a claim for malicious process was dismissed.

In August 1988 the plaintiff was arrested and charged with going equipped for theft. He was remanded to a police station by Hyland Justices under section 128(7) of the 1980 Act in order that inquiries into other offences could be made. He was released three days later.

The plaintiff was subsequently acquitted. He alleged that throughout the three day period there had not been a need for his detention to inquire into other offences.

Section 128 of the 1980 Act, as amended, provides: "(7) A magistrates' court having power to remand a person in custody may, if the remand is for a period not exceeding three clear days, commit him to detention at a police station."

"(8) Where a person is committed to detention at a police station under subsection (7) above - (a) he shall not be kept in such detention unless there is a need for him to be so detained; for the purposes of inquiries into other offences; (b) if kept in such detention, he shall be brought back before the magistrates' court which committed him as soon as that need ceases."

Mr David T. Eccles, for the chief constable; Mr Charles Davey for the plaintiff.

SIR RALPH GIBSON said that the chief constable had argued that no action for false imprisonment lay against the police because detention in a police station under section 128(7) was the consequence of a judicial act and depended on the refusal of bail. The order dealt only with the place and not the fact of detention. If the police acted improperly the remedy was an action for malicious process.

In his Lordship's judgment, section 128(7) did not apply to a person who was otherwise to be released on bail. If the police neglected to comply promptly with the provisions of section 128(8) the detention was not false imprisonment at common law.

As to breach of statutory duty, the provisions of section 128 were of a regulatory character and directed to the proceedings of the magistrates' court.

His Lordship could see nothing to indicate any intention that a person should have a civil right to damages for a breach of section 128(8).

That did not mean that a person had no remedy if those provisions were breached; he could apply to the High Court for bail or take an action for malicious process.

Lord Justice Staughton and Lord Justice Ward gave concurring judgments.

Solicitors: Mr G. A. Johnson; Preston; Linskill, Liverpool.

English cases in The Times Law Report are supplied by barristers of the Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales, 3 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, London, WC2A 3BH. Tel 0171 834 6666; Fax 0171 404 1098.

TO ADVERTISE
CALL: 0171 481 4481

MEDIA, SALES & MARKETING

FAX:
0171 782 7826

CAN'T STOP TALKING?

Do you have a clear voice, are persuasive by nature and looking to earn your true worth? We are one of Europe's most successful publishers and now have opportunities for the right people to join our successful, team working on international titles with worldwide circulation.

EARNINGS BETWEEN £24-60K PLUS P.A.

Excellent remuneration including full basic salary plus commission (high commission only also available).

Call Philip Armstrong
0171 915 9677

FREELANCE JOURNALIST

Study from home and make writing a new career or profitable second income.

Free 0800 371 500

MORRIS

COLLIER OF JOURNALISTS

Career Problems?

To resolve any career problem, you MUST talk to us. We will help you to find out what you are best at, what you like to do, and what you can do to achieve your career goals.

0171 308 9946

For free, initial consultation.

JCC The Career Consultants

43, Skyline, Marsh Wall, London E14 9TB.

EXECUTIVE SALES PERSON

Excellent Retainer & Bonus
New Investment Software Company, poised for significant expansion and development requiring Executive Sales Reps. to work in their West End Based Office.

Applications:
• must have successful track record in a negotiating business.
• fast learner, reliable
• flexible and enthusiastic
For interview call Laura on 0171 878 9000.

REGIONAL SALES MANAGER

MIDLANDS

Basic salary to £32,000 + commission giving realistic OTE of £42,000 + car + mobile telephone + fax.

Our client requires a proven track record of team recruitment, training and development from any industry.

ACCOUNT MANAGERS

LONDON, HOME COUNTIES and MIDLANDS

Basic salary to £20,000 + commission based on 2% of sales - OTE £36,000 + mobile phone + fax + car allowance.

Must have a proven track record of sales development from any industry.

SALES EXECUTIVES

LONDON, HOME COUNTIES and MIDLANDS

Basic salary £14,000 - realistic OTE of £30,000 + mobile phone + fax + car allowance.

NO PREVIOUS SALES EXPERIENCE NECESSARY

FINANCIAL ADVISERS

SLOUGH AREA

Good basic salary based on previous earnings + excellent commission structure.

NO PREVIOUS SALES EXPERIENCE NECESSARY

We also have Telesales, Telemarketing and Customer Services positions based in the London Area.

Please send Resume with covering letter to the address below stating position sought.

MARKETPLACE APPOINTMENTS LTD

14 The Parade, High Street, Watford, WD1 2AA

CJA

RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS GROUP

2 London Wall Buildings, London Wall, London EC2M 5PP

Tel: 0171-588 3588 or 0171-588 3576

Fax No: 0171-256 3501

GRADUATE MARKETING REPRESENTATIVE

LONDON SW1 £18,000-£22,000 + BENEFITS

EXPANDING MULTI-NATIONAL MINING CORPORATION

Our client is ranked among the most successful mining houses in the world with employees in 30 countries. They require a graduate, aged 22-24, with a good degree (preferably technical) from a leading university, to be trained in London with a view to becoming an international marketing executive to be based throughout their worldwide marketing offices. The successful candidate's mother tongue will ideally be a major European language other than English, but with total fluency in English. Computer literacy and a desire to travel are essential, as are fluent communication skills and proven leadership abilities. Initiative and political awareness are also necessary for the career development offered by this growing organisation which is looking for its future senior executives. Applications in strict confidence quoting reference GMR5339/TT to the Managing Director, CJA.

The FHS Computer Unit provides IT solutions to Health Authorities nationally. Our primary customers in the NHS are embarking on major initiatives to implement electronic communications throughout the whole of the service. To support these initiatives, the FHS is looking for experienced Product and Sales Managers, ideally with experience within the NHS, to deliver and sell innovative communications and Electronic Data Interchange (EDI) Solutions.

Product Managers

£26,000 + PRP

Exeter

You will be responsible for the full product development and delivery of PC and UNIX based Communications & EDI Systems and protocols to time, quality and cost through the direction of others.

You should have a minimum of 2 years' project/product management experience together with a technical understanding and awareness of EDI & Communication Systems.

Technical Sales Manager

£26,000 + Car

Initial 1 year contract

Working nationally, this role will involve you in identifying new products & services and through liaison with our Product Managers, the agreeing and monitoring of sales plans. We will look to you to progress sales leads through to completion.

You should have a proven track record in a technical sales environment, and be able to demonstrate an understanding of PC and UNIX based communications & EDI systems and protocols, including IPSMTP, X.400 and EDIFACT. You will be an excellent communicator at all levels - from Information Systems Manager to Chief Executive.

A clean driving licence and willingness to travel is essential.

To apply, send your CV including current salary details and the names of two referees, to Lesley Radford, Personnel Officer, FHS Computer Unit, Heron House, PO Box 78, Pynes Hill, Rydon Lane, Exeter EX2 5SE. Closing date is Monday 25th February 1996. Interviews will be held in Exeter during March.

WE ARE WORKING TOWARDS BECOMING AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES EMPLOYER

FHS

COMPUTER UNIT

THE YANKEE GROUP EUROPE

The Yankee Group Europe is an industry leader in IT market studies and forecasts. It provides both packaged planning services and custom consulting projects.

Account Managers

The Yankee Group is expanding its European sales team, and requires Account Managers to sell strategic planning services to selected areas within the UK and Europe.

You will ideally be a graduate perhaps with an MBA, and an accomplished professional with expertise in marketing and selling information technology products or services. Experience in the sales of IT consultancy/information advisory services is a plus.

Self-motivation and excellent communication and interpersonal skills are essential, as are good organisational skills.

Sales/Sales Support

A position also exists for an office-based person to assist Account Managers in developing new business. The right candidate will have some experience of IT and sales, be well organised and quick to learn.

Senior Computing Analyst

We are also looking for an experienced industry analyst, with many years in the computing industry. Applicants must have strong writing, speaking and analytical skills. Successful applicants are likely to possess both technical and business degree-level qualifications.

Topics to be covered include outsourcing, software and IT services, client/server, middleware and workgroup computing.

Analysts write several major publications each year and build strong personal profiles and relationships at a senior level through consultancy work, ongoing client enquiries and public speaking.

Language skills would be useful for all roles.

The Yankee Group Europe

If you are self motivated, creative and interested in making a real contribution to a growing team, please send your CV to:

Personnel,

The Old Free School, George Street, Watford, Herts, WD1 8BX

Fax: +44 1923 242456

email: info@yankee.co.uk

هناك من النسخ

Even if you believe passionately in a free press, you are not obliged to become a martyr to a journalist in pursuit of a story

Why did he do it? The question dogs The House, the much-praised series on the Royal Opera House with two weeks still to run on BBC2. How could Jeremy Isaacs, the general director and a man who knows a thing or two about television, let the candid cameras in to wander about, with results that could harm his reputation and the House's subsidy?

As an Isaacs fan, who believes that his contribution to British cultural life — the famed World at War series, the creation of Channel 4 — has been insufficiently rewarded (where is his knight-hood?), I'm sure the answer is a surfeit of fairness. If you believe in the public's right to know what goes on in public institutions, it seems only right to open the doors. Right, perhaps, but not essential. There is no duty, even for champions of the free press, to talk to the press — just as there is no need to pay more tax than you owe.

You have the right to remain silent

Social responsibility does not require martyrdom. Mr Isaacs could justifiably have refused the series on the same principle by which barristers never ask a witness a question to which they do not know the answer. The risk to those you represent is too great. Fly-on-the-wall documentaries, in particular, have given their programme-makers an opportunity to be brilliant at the subject's expense. Remember The Family?

In the end, Mr Isaacs's trust may be proved right. The Royal Opera House, as in last night's brilliant episode showing the parallel ballets of young dancers competing and trade unionists negotiating, emerges as a microcosm of British life. Many who never go near the place will end up loving it.

Anyone faced with a similar invitation, however, would do better to take the advice of that sage Californian, Nancy Reagan, and just say no.

To do so, though, is not without risk. As a journalist, I spend my days asking people, often strangers, to supply information for a work-in-progress which, they know, is unlikely to show them as they see themselves. I am continually grateful that they do answer my questions and return my calls. I am especially grateful to press officers in large organisations, who know that only a novice would stoop to the crude question, which no self-respecting journalist would answer: "What sort of line is your article going to take?"

But there is a lot of anti-press grievance about — well short of anything to merit the attention of the Press Complaints Commission, but which could be avoided with a few simple precautions. Don't ramble on and on, for example, and then complain that you have been quoted "out of context"; all quotes are out of context. Anyone agreeing to give an interview should read what else the interviewer has written. There are certain specialists in bitchiness against whom no one wins. Another good rule — Maevie Binchy, the Irish novelist, says Gore Vidal passed it on to her — "never let them interview you at home because they'll interview your house". The peeing paint on the door, the unwashed cat-dish, the personal telephone call that arrives in the middle of the interview — all become fair game to the journalist invited over the threshold. Neutral territory, such as a restaurant, is safer but only if any mention of what is eaten or drunk is ruled out in advance. "She toyed with her tripe à la mode de Caen as she reflected..." is very vulgarish in journalism.

A lot of experts reel in shock from having their brains picked. They should learn to be on guard against the telephone call that begins: "We're preparing a programme on astrobotany and wonder if you can spare a few minutes?" This is how a researcher extracts someone's lifetime knowledge without issuing an invitation to appear on the programme.

Shrewdly, the Committee for Public Understanding of Science (Copus), keeps a list of scientific experts prepared to talk quickly and clearly to the press. Other kinds of expert should consider such tactics as asking for a modest consultancy fee, offering to write an article themselves, or, at least, ask that the quotations to be attributed to them be read back. If the result is still infuriating, a letter to the editor or ombudsman is worth doing. Even if it does not get printed, it will give the offender a bad quarter of an hour. The ordinary citizen who picks up the telephone and finds the press on the line should take extreme care. Some tips. On no account be flattered. Find out to whom you are speaking. Don't answer more than you are asked. If you have something you really want in the press, ring the paper of your choice and ask who is covering the story. If you really don't want to talk, ask when the deadline is, and call back ten minutes before it. And don't say "off the record" halfway through, or worse, slam in and out of confidentiality so that neither of you knows where you are. Above all, remember you are furnishing meat for someone else's salami. There's no shame in not contributing. When you hear, as on Monday's Newsnight, "British Gas refused to comment on the FT's story", did you feel embarrassed for British Gas? Of course not. Silence is often the better part of PR.

BRENDA MADDOX

Extracting the farce from political drama

Alexandra Frean on the Scott inquiry, coming to television screens soon

If the Government thought that television would confine its coverage of Sir Richard Scott's much-delayed report into the arms-to-Iraq affair, to long-winded news and current affairs programmes, it is going to be sorely disappointed. Both the BBC and Channel 4 have turned the inquiry, which contained more dramatic and amusing one-liners than most sitcoms, into novel forms of drama and comedy that bridge the worlds of current affairs and light entertainment.

Channel 4 has cleared its schedules late this Saturday evening to make way for a two-hour 15-minute satirical extravaganza of sketches and reconstructions of the most striking scenes from the inquiry. The programme, Scott of the Arms Antics, will be anchored by Sheena McDonald and will feature the satirist Rory Bremner and the investigative journalist Paul Foot.

Rory Bremner believes that broadcasters have to tread a fine line in mixing satire and current affairs. "There is a danger that it could become too facetious and smug. I don't want John Major to dismiss it as a lot of smart people distorting the truth — that, after all, is what they have been doing," he says.

The way to avoid this, Mr Bremner says, is through thorough research — he spent 18 days wading through transcripts of the Scott inquiry — and careful, "light-touch" scripting.

A week later, on Sunday February 18, the BBC is to screen Half the Picture, a film reconstruction of the Scott inquiry starring Sylvia Syms as Baroness Thatcher and Michael Stroud as Sir Richard Scott. The film is based on the Theatre Theatre production of the play by the dramatist John McGrath and the journalist Richard Norton-Taylor.

For broadcasters, Scott is a

Jan Chappell, Sylvia Syms and Michael Stroud in Half the Picture, the BBC's reconstruction of the Scott inquiry gift. Rarely has an opportunity presented itself to television to explore the "machinations of government in such a dramatic and entertaining way. What script writer would have dared to invent John Major's comment to the inquiry: "One of course, was that in some way I must have known — because I had been the Chancellor, because I had been Foreign Secretary, because I had been Prime Minister — what was going on?"

When a civil servant was challenged by Sir Richard that a statement in a document was "junk", who could have invented the answer, "As a basic principle — but not necessarily total junk"?

As Mr McGrath, co-writer and producer of Half the Picture, says: "You couldn't make it up. And if you did, nobody would believe it."

David Lloyd, Channel 4's senior commissioning editor of news and current affairs, who commissioned Scott of the Arms Antics, believes that the implications are so great that broadcasters have a duty to give it special treatment and invent new formats for it. "The event demands it. What we are trying to say is 'don't imagine that this is just about arms trading, it's also about the way government runs this country,'" he says.

Mr Lloyd hopes that the programme will reach beyond the core current affairs audience. "I want viewers to come away from it with an extremely clear idea about the issues behind it. Scott has been given an unparalleled opportunity to shine a light on the system and that will be his legacy," Mr Lloyd says.

Mr McGrath hopes that by packaging the entire Scott inquiry, which took 11 months, into a 90-minute film, "people will get the overall picture."

"It will show the contradictions that emerged over many days in the inquiry in a single picture," he adds.

He points out that as the television cameras were banned from the inquiry, it is difficult for most people to appreciate just how sensational much of it was.

You couldn't make it up. Nobody would believe it.

George Faber, head of single drama at the BBC, who commissioned the film, agrees that it will make the complexities of the Scott Report more accessible to a wider audience.

Mr McGrath, who was the original director of the 2 Cents series, says that the inquiry was a dramatic event and that there is a lot of drama in the individual exchanges and in the way successive exchanges reveal what is going on. It is almost like a whodunnit.

Both the BBC and Channel 4 say they have exercised great restraint in order to ensure a fair and balanced view. "It would have been easy to make some people look very silly, but we have tried to avoid that by careful editing. Even then, what comes out is a murky picture," Mr McGrath says.

Both hope that their respective dramatic treatments of the Scott inquiry and report will set a precedent for them to mix politically and publicly sensitive current affairs events with drama and entertainment in future.

The BBC is already preparing dramatisations of the Nick Leeson story, of the search for the killers of Julie Ward and of the Gulf War.

Mr Lloyd says that Channel 4 "has been searching for years for a model of programme that could say something serious but which would also entertain and would not just draw upon the natural tools of the current affairs department."

"We are planning to run something similar during the general election campaign."

Alan Mitchell on the promotion worth $400 million

The battle of the Pogs is upon us. Since the Pog was introduced into Britain last year, this latest playground craze has swept the country, captivating five to 11-year-olds, boys and girls alike. Now these little ruddy-wink-like tokens have become the subject of a marketing war between Britain's snack companies. And if safety campaigners have their way, they could also trigger new legislation.

The Pog craze took off when a Hawaiian drinks company revived an old Hawaiian game as a promotion for its Passion Fruit, Orange and Guava (POG) drink. It put colourful designs on its bottle tops so that kids could collect them. The kids went crazy.

The American games entrepreneur Doug McFadden (other hits: Trivial Pursuit, Pictionary) and friends liked the promotion so much they bought the company. Now they are turning it into a global brand. Mr McFadden is in London this week to sign up a major drinks company to sell Pog drink across Europe.

The success secret behind the game of Pog, he says, is its old-fashioned simplicity. "They're like marbles. Kids can stuff them in their pocket, collect and trade them, and they can afford them [in the UK they cost 99p for six]." Parents love Pogs because they get the children away from the computer screen and playing together instead.

Like marbles, they're won and lost in playground competitions, says Barry Walker, chairman of the British Association of Toy Retailers, which last week named Pogs the toy of the year.

It's crunch time in the war of the Pogs er countries and, in its experience, at that level of Pogs per capita the craze really takes off," declares its UK marketing vice-president, Martin Glenn.

While the original Pog is cardboard, Tazos are plastic. Tazos also have a notch in them that allows children to stick them together. "We have a point of difference. Ours are buildable," boasts Mr Glenn.

"We are offering the genuine article," replies Nigel Parrott, marketing manager of Golden Wonder, which paid Waddington's, the owners of the UK licence, for the privilege.

Earlier this year United Biscuits subsidiary KP withdrew 12 million packets of Skips after consumers complained that the Pog-like "milk caps" it had used in a promotion could be swallowed. Now, in the wake of reports that a Belgian woman choked to death on a crisp-packet Pog, safety campaigners are calling for the promotions to be halted.

"If Pogs are small enough to be put in the mouths of children they are dangerous. It's an unnecessary hazard," says James Tye, director-general of the British Safety Council.

The council has been campaigning against similar promotions in cereal packets for the last 30 years, and this week Mr Tye called for legislation to prevent future Pog-style in-pack promotions. Both Walkers and Golden Wonder insist that their brightly coloured Pogs, which are separately wrapped in plastic, are safe.

Indeed, their safeguards go beyond what the law requires. "We have passed all the choke tests," says Mr Glenn. In Holland, where a similar promotion is well under way, there have not been any reports of problems, he adds.

Meanwhile, there is big money to be made out of little Pogs. Last year Waddington's sold more than 100 million of the cardboard discs while the brand's owners, the World Pog Federation, totted up global sales of $400 million. Golden Wonder is spending £3.5 million on its promotion, including TV advertising. It is hoping for a 20 per cent sales boost.

Walkers still expects its Tazos promotion to generate huge sales increases. PepsiCo Food International decided to "go global" with Tazos promotions after initial tests produced sales increases of 50 per cent and more.

In Holland, more Tazos collectors' albums have been purchased than the country has children. If Walkers achieves half of that sort of uptake here, it will be close to overtaking Coca-Cola to become the country's biggest supermarket brand.

Crisp-makers say Pogs like this one will boost sales

BBC drama gains on ITV

THE BBC's quest to boost its drama ratings and compete effectively with ITV in this field is showing promising signs of paying off. The corporation occupies ten of the top 20 drama programmes in our ratings chart this week.

The epic series Our Friends in the North shot straight to the top of the BBC2 ratings chart with 5.1 million viewers. The question now is whether it can maintain this audience for all nine episodes.

The BBC's latest detective series, Hetty Wainthropp Investigates, is also scoring well with more than ten million viewers.

The BBC cannot afford to be complacent, however. ITV is soon to air a raft of strong popular drama series which regularly top the ten million mark. These include Kavanagh QC, Peak Practice and Band of Gold 2.

JANUARY 15 TO 21, 1996
Programme	Date	Time	Channel	Producers	Genre	Audience(m)
A Touch of Frost	Sun 21	20:01	ITV	Yorkshire	Series	17.5
Casualty	Sat 20	20:07	BBC1	BBC	Series	16.4
Catherine Cookson's Tide of Life	Fri 19	21:02	ITV	Festival/World Wide	Series	12.5
Top Gear	Thu 18	21:02	ITV	Scottish	Series	11.4
Hetty Wainthropp Investigates	Wed 17	21:05	BBC1	BBC	Series	10.8
Pin in the Sky	Sun 21	19:30	BBC1	Watership	Series	8.9
Call the Police	Fri 19	22:00	BBC1	Ten Thirteen/20th Cent Fox	Series	8.9
The Vet	Mon 15	21:01	ITV	Thames	Series	8.9
Mind to Murder	Thu 18	20:00	BBC1	Rome Films	Series	7.3
Alvin and Kipking	Sat 20	21:10	ITV	Anglia	Series	6.7
Our Friends in the North	Sun 21	21:07	BBC1	BBC	Series	5.1
The Demon Headmaster	Thu 18	21:02	BBC2	BBC	Series	5.1
Sand of Gold	Sun 21	17:11	BBC1	BBC	Series	4.8
Aut Widescreen, Put	Sat 20	22:43	ITV	Gemada	Series	4.1
East West	Wed 17	17:52	BBC2	Paramount	Series	3.9
ER	Thu 18	22:02	ITV	Constant G/Amblin	Series	3.0
Miles and Angelo	Thu 18	16:20	ITV	Tetra	Series	3.0

High-spending editors have so far failed to stop the Express fall, says Brian MacArthur

Mail shrugs off rival challenge

Fleet Street offers many spectacular sports — The Sun v The Daily Mirror, The Guardian v The Independent, the editorship of The Observer — but none is more engaging than the epic battle between the resurgent Mail group and the steadily sinking Express group.

So there was huge entertainment to be had from the Daily Mail on Monday when it trumped its sales had risen above two million.

For Paul Dacre, Editor of the Daily Mail since 1992 after the 21-year reign of Sir David English (now chairman of Associated Newspapers and Editor-in-Chief), the announcement will have offered several reasons for relish. In an era when sales of national newspapers have been falling, to sell more than two million copies a day — up 250,000 copies on a year ago — for the first time in 28 years — is a huge achievement in itself, albeit with help from a scratchcard promotion and the death of Today.

It meant, too, that under Dacre the Daily Mail had achieved a significantly higher sale than was ever recorded during the editorship of the legendary English.

A greater reason for relish, however, was that sales of the Daily Mail went up in January as those of its rival, the Daily Express went down. In what many see as a final attempt by Lord Stevens of Ludgate, chairman of Express Newspapers, to revive the flagging sales of his two flagship national titles, new editors were appointed in December to the Daily Express and Sunday Express.

Both Richard Addis and Sue Douglas got their main experience on the Daily Mail. With the promise of millions of pounds of investment, they have hired and fired with abandon. Addis, who went to the Daily Express, instantly recruited five of Dacre's most senior lieutenants as well as a clutch of his star writers, some of whom turned down offers of even more money to stay.

At the Sunday Express, Douglas recruited eight journalists, having approached 40, from the Sunday Times, where she had been deputy editor. She has recruited Julie Burchill from The Sunday Times as a columnist and moved the paper upmarket. Neither Addis nor Douglas will get sympathy from the cut-throat world of Fleet Street, but both deserve it: simply to arrest four decades of declining sales would be an achievement.

Yet in January, when sales start rising after the Christmas dip, sales of both their papers fell again. When the monthly Audit Bureau of Circulation report is published on Friday it is expected to show that the Daily Mail increased by 79,000 last month against a loss by the Daily Express of about 19,000.

Meanwhile, the Sunday Express shed 43,000 sales, as The Mail on Sunday boosted its circulation by more than 100,000 to over 2.1 million — and for the first time in history The Sunday Times, at about 1,295,000, sold more than the Sunday Express.

The sales figures will put both editors under renewed pressure to show results for the money they have spent — some writers are now on more than £100,000 a year. They need the investment they have been promised in the sort of reader promotions at which the Mail group excels. That investment needs to be continuous rather than spasmodic — a new Express scratchcard game last month failed to lift sales.

NEWS

Lords win TV sport battle

■ Broadcasting of top sporting events on BBC and ITV was guaranteed last night after the Lords defeated the Government, preventing them going exclusively to satellite television.
A cross-party alliance of peers secured a 117-vote victory to ensure general broadcasting of eight events — cricket Test matches; the Derby; the Grand National; the Football World Cup finals; the FA Cup final; the Scottish FA Cup final; Wimbledon finals; and the Olympics. Pages 1, 10, 27

Sid told to cash in his shares

■ Sid, the archetypal small shareholder eagerly pursued when British Gas was privatised, is being told that he is not wanted now that the company is to be split up. Such investors are to be encouraged to cash in their shares to avoid British Gas Energy having a register of 1.8 million names. Pages 1, 25, 27, 29

Snow chaos

Much of Britain was paralysed by some of the heaviest snowfalls for 50 years with motorists stranded for a second night in their cars and hundreds of schools shut. Page 1, 3

Swimmer breaks legs

The Olympic dreams of Alex Bennett, 18, one of Britain's brightest young swimmers, have been shattered by a head-on car crash in which she broke both legs on her way to training. Page 1

Clarke warning

Slashing the welfare budget overnight could lead to riots in the streets, Kenneth Clarke told the Tory Right as he mapped out a gradual path to reducing state spending. Pages 2, 10

School tests

Gillian Shephard is asking her curriculum advisers to consider tests for nine-year-olds to counter alarm about primary school standards. Pages 4, 18

Collins in court

Joan Collins swept into a New York Court "to speak for many authors" in a dispute with the publisher who rejected her novel as "implausible". Page 5

Asthma campaign

More than 1,000 people are dying from asthma in Britain each year because doctors prescribe the wrong drugs, experts said at the launch of a campaign. Page 6

Lada convoy heads home to Ukraine

■ Five Ukrainian sailors stranded on Tyneside for ten months are setting off for home in three battered Ladas. They are the remaining crew of the tall ship Tovarisch, marooned since last April, when safety experts said it would cost £2 million to make her seaworthy. Local people have been feeding and clothing them. The captain is staying with his ship. Page 4

Destitute doctor

An American doctor whose new British employers paid for his rent and pick-up truck to be brought from Missouri said they were all he had left after a divorce settlement. Page 7

Murder memories

Elsie Wilson, 67, a Yorkshire farmer's wife, is preparing for the anniversary of the motiveless murder of her twin sister Margaret. Police say the killing remains an enigma. Page 9

Indian prohibition

The north Indian state of Haryana has announced that all rural liquor stores must close permanently by April 1 in another attempt to control the nation's thirst for alcohol. Page 11

White House race

As Louisiana Republicans prepared to cast the first votes of the 1996 presidential election the enormous cost of Steve Forbes's bid was revealed. Page 12

Cézanne fever

Philippe Paul Cézanne was feted as he arrived for the exhibition of his great-grandfather's work. The Tate has been swamped by ticket applications. Page 13

Serbs questioned

War crimes investigators from The Hague questioned three senior Serb military officers seized by the Bosnian Government in Sarajevo last week. Page 14

Virginia Bottomley, the Heritage Secretary, addressing the inaugural meeting of the Westminster Media Forum in London

BUSINESS

Coal failure

Almost 1,500 mining jobs are at risk after a rescue attempt broke down and administrators were appointed at Coal Investments. Page 25

Manufacturing fall

December's unexpected slump in manufacturing activity led to the weakest quarterly performance since early 1992 and increased speculation about base rates falling further. Page 25

Jaguar

The car company has been forced to lay off more than 2,000 workers for a week. Page 26

Markets

The FT-SE 100 index ended 0.9 points higher at 3,747.5, with 871.7 million shares traded. The pound rose 0.78 cents to $1.5405 and 1.38 pence to DM2.2664, lifting the sterling index to 84.3 from 83.7. Page 28

SPORT

Cricket

The chairman and chief executive of the International Cricket Council are to intercede in the dispute over matches scheduled for Colombo which threatens the World Cup. Page 48

Football

Roger Stanislaus was sacked by Leyton Orient after testing positive for cocaine after a match at Barnet last November. Stanislaus was already suspended for a year by the FA. Page 48

Rugby union

France, who were unexpectedly beaten by Scotland last weekend, have dropped four players for their next match in the five nations' championship, against Ireland. Page 43

Athletics

Dionicio Ceron will attempt a hat-trick in the London Marathon on April 21. Page 43

Arts

Merseybeat memories

A new musical, Ferry Cross the Mersey, is part of Liverpool's growth industry: marketing its pop past. Alan Jackson on the city that sells John Lennon Meringue Pie. Page 39

Post-apartheid

At the Royal Court, the playwright Athol Fugard offers a deep and subtle message for the new South Africa in Valley Song. Page 39

Young at Art

Schoolchildren are learning to write songs like Berg rather than Bhur, thanks to a Wignmore Hall songwriting project in four schools. Page 40

Music man

Mark Elder is back at English National Opera, the place where he made his name as an opera conductor. But does Covent Garden beckon? Page 41

IN THE TIMES

FILMS

Cops and dealers: Spike Lee travels mean streets again in Clockers

BOOKS

Anthony Storr on why the poet Michael Ryan is addicted to sex

OPINION

Muesel and Montessori

Two of the essentials discovered by the middle classes, a social stratum which needs defending. Page 17

Great Scott

Television has found that the Scott inquiry has more onliners than most sit-coms. Page 23

Riverside rises

Property prices in London's Docklands remain below their 1988 peak but they are 20 per cent up on 1992. Page 33

Trendy toddlers

Children like to look cool and be comfortable, says Iain R. Webb, as three mothers photograph their offspring in this spring's look. Page 16

Pay ups and downs

Our annual survey of who earns what on the salary ladder. Page 36

The United States would have no choice but to help Taiwan to defend itself against attack by Communist China. No treaty or law compels this response, but decency and strategic interest demand it. However, there is an overwhelming national need to prevent today's friction becoming tomorrow's explosion. The Washington Post

Preview: Ordinary Britons on faith and life after death. V.A. Narayan (BBC2, 1pm); Review: Matthew Bond makes friends with the voice-overs. Page 47

Great Scott

Judgment on the report by Sir Richard Scott into government policy on arms sales to Iraq will not be complete by Friday morning, and ministers' fates will not be determined by Friday's headlines. Page 19

Wise virgins

Editors and proprietors should ask themselves how happy they are to bid for pocket money by promising sex. They have a duty of care to their readers as much as their marketing departments. Page 19

Colombia's 'Caligate'

The rule of law is still held in esteem by Colombians. Señor Samper, however, is not. He should find another job. Page 19

LORD MACKAY

Our living constitution may look untidy, but like the Wynds in the old parts of Scotland's towns it is homey; it is ours, and it has grown through our history. Page 4

SIMON JENKINS

With league tables of teachers, of children, even of parents, Gillian Shephard and Chris Woodhead could prove conclusively that the middle classes are top. Page 17

PETER RIDDELL

Kenneth Clarke made a convincing case for gradualism. There is an alternative to Peter Lilley's piecemeal approach in limiting future commitments. Over time, these can produce sizeable savings. Page 1

SIMON BARNES

Xenophobia is part of sporting life. It has to be: when you love a country, it is the enemy. This is inevitable, but those of us who are not international athletes should avoid the same error. Page 16

Brigadier Donald Nott: The Right Rev Vernon Nicholls. Bishop of Sodor and Man, 1974-83; Sir Archibald Ross. Page 21

Kohl's European "convoy": pop composers; Burundi: election; reform. Page 11

THE TIMES CROSSWORD NO 20,084

- ACROSS
- Representative character from book of James (10).
 - Young group's state (4).
 - Valour in the thick of battle, hiding sign of pain (7).
 - Conclusive move on board to restrain ship's officer (9).
 - Brought up near a city in Europe (5).
 - More sensible to use old-fashioned way, right? (5).
 - Submitted to trial, provided one gets caught and witnessed (9).
 - Views, say, with headlands (9).
 - Nomad wants animal back before end of this year (5).
 - Take place of commander, calling up reserves initially (5).
 - Detected doing something wrong, and arrested abroad (6,3).
 - Drink more rum, number one (7).
- DOWN
- An aromatic flavouring mostly used in meat jelly (5).
 - Bleat about street needing repair in part of London (9).
 - Variety of cranks pose 'ere? Right (8,6).
 - Do some drawing in pamphlet, at first (7).
 - Weigh down with work and urgency of business (7).
 - Present expression of sympathy (5).
 - Careful management from partner reduced transport business (9).
 - One who's sceptical, but changes during performance with poet (8,6).
 - Part of US is seen in western with criminals in (9).
 - Make do and mend around island (9).
 - Instrument little used in Italy (7).
 - Son selected, took part in boat race (7).
 - Manager who works at stock exchange? (5).
 - Two chaps briefly recorded the minutes, say (5).

Solution to Puzzle No 20,083

DOUBLE OR QUITS
ABUNDANCE TENON DUBIOUS AND
MAYOR BRIG OGRE
A HUE COOR
NARROWS SPONGES
SEES LUT
HAPLESS WOOMERA
ALNMAUT
NEED PURR ROUGE
DNDGPINM
LATTY GRAPEVINE
SELTSON
HORSECHESNUT

TIMES WEATHERCALL

For the latest region by region forecast, 24 hours a day, dial 0800 500 followed by the appropriate code.

Region	Forecast
Greater London	701
South East	702
South West	703
West Midlands	704
East Midlands	705
North East	706
North West	707
Yorkshire & the Humber	708
East of England	709
West of England	710
Central Scotland	711
North Scotland	712
South Scotland	713
Wales	714
North Wales	715
South Wales	716
London & SE England	717
East of England	718
West of England	719
Central Scotland	720
North Scotland	721
South Scotland	722
Wales	723
North Wales	724
South Wales	725
London & SE England	726
East of England	727
West of England	728
Central Scotland	729
North Scotland	730
South Scotland	731
Wales	732
North Wales	733
South Wales	734
London & SE England	735
East of England	736
West of England	737
Central Scotland	738
North Scotland	739
South Scotland	740
Wales	741
North Wales	742
South Wales	743
London & SE England	744
East of England	745
West of England	746
Central Scotland	747
North Scotland	748
South Scotland	749
Wales	750
North Wales	751
South Wales	752
London & SE England	753
East of England	754
West of England	755
Central Scotland	756
North Scotland	757
South Scotland	758
Wales	759
North Wales	760
South Wales	761
London & SE England	762
East of England	763
West of England	764
Central Scotland	765
North Scotland	766
South Scotland	767
Wales	768
North Wales	769
South Wales	770
London & SE England	771
East of England	772
West of England	773
Central Scotland	774
North Scotland	775
South Scotland	776
Wales	777
North Wales	778
South Wales	779
London & SE England	780
East of England	781
West of England	782
Central Scotland	783
North Scotland	784
South Scotland	785
Wales	786
North Wales	787
South Wales	788
London & SE England	789
East of England	790
West of England	791
Central Scotland	792
North Scotland	793
South Scotland	794
Wales	795
North Wales	796
South Wales	797
London & SE England	798
East of England	799
West of England	800

AA ROADWATCH

For the latest AA traffic roadwatch information 24 hours a day, dial 0300 401 123 followed by the appropriate code.

Region	Forecast
Greater London	701
South East	702
South West	703
West Midlands	704
East Midlands	705
North East	706
North West	707
Yorkshire & the Humber	708
East of England	709
West of England	710
Central Scotland	711
North Scotland	712
South Scotland	713
Wales	714
North Wales	715
South Wales	716
London & SE England	717
East of England	718
West of England	719
Central Scotland	720
North Scotland	721
South Scotland	722
Wales	723
North Wales	724
South Wales	725
London & SE England	726
East of England	727
West of England	728
Central Scotland	729
North Scotland	730
South Scotland	731
Wales	732
North Wales	733
South Wales	734
London & SE England	735
East of England	736
West of England	737
Central Scotland	738
North Scotland	739
South Scotland	740
Wales	741
North Wales	742
South Wales	743
London & SE England	744
East of England	745
West of England	746
Central Scotland	747
North Scotland	748
South Scotland	749
Wales	750
North Wales	751
South Wales	752
London & SE England	753
East of England	754
West of England	755
Central Scotland	756
North Scotland	757
South Scotland	758
Wales	759
North Wales	760
South Wales	761
London & SE England	762
East of England	763
West of England	764
Central Scotland	765
North Scotland	766
South Scotland	767
Wales	768
North Wales	769
South Wales	770
London & SE England	771
East of England	772
West of England	773
Central Scotland	774
North Scotland	775
South Scotland	776
Wales	777
North Wales	778
South Wales	779
London & SE England	780
East of England	781
West of England	782
Central Scotland	783
North Scotland	784
South Scotland	785
Wales	786
North Wales	787
South Wales	788
London & SE England	789
East of England	790
West of England	791
Central Scotland	792
North Scotland	793
South Scotland	794
Wales	795
North Wales	796
South Wales	797
London & SE England	798
East of England	799
West of England	800

HIGHEST & LOWEST

Yesterday's highest day temp, previous record, 9C (48F); lowest day temp, previous record, 0C (32F); highest night temp, previous record, 1C (34F); lowest night temp, previous record, -1C (30F).

Comet: 58V

AROUND BRITAIN YESTERDAY

24 hrs to 5 pm: b = bright; c = cloud; d = drizzle; ds = dust storm; du = dust; f = fog; g = gale; h = hail; l = light; m = mist; o = overcast; r = rain; s = sun; t = thunder; w = wind; x = not available.

be generally cloudy, with light outbreaks of snow along the east coasts and in northeast England. Rain; sleet and snow will spread into the southwest during the morning and into the southern counties in the afternoon.

Scotland and Northern Ireland will also be cloudy, with Northern Ireland and western Scotland seeing the best of any brightness. The rest of Scotland will have further outbreaks of sleet and snow while sleet will spread into Northern Ireland later in the afternoon.

☐ London, SE England, E Angles
E Midlands, W Midlands, N Wales: cloudy. Rain, sleet and snow from late afternoon. Cold. Wind light south-easterly, becoming moderate to fresh.
Max 12C (34F).

☐ Central S England, Channel

هنا نحن

ARTS 39-41
Mark Elder: happy to be back on the podium at ENO

HOMES 33
Families are moving back into Docklands

SPORT 43-48
France ring in changes for Ireland game

TELEVISION AND RADIO
Pages 46, 47

THE TIMES

BUSINESS EDITOR Lindsay Cook WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY 7 1996

Restructuring prompted by loss of supply monopoly and massive liabilities

British Gas sets 1997 target for demerger

By ROSS TITMAN AND ERIC REGULY

BRITISH GAS yesterday unveiled the most radical restructuring in British corporate history, detailing plans to give 1.8 million investors free shares in a demerged gas supply business.

The company is to float off its gas supply business, together with Britain's biggest gasfields and its £40 billion of loss-making, take-or-pay contracts. The move aims to free the utility from the uncertainties and liabilities arising from the Government's removal of its monopoly over the supply of gas to households and smaller businesses.

The demerged British Gas Energy, as it has been provisionally named, will have 22,000 employees, annual sales of £8 billion and net assets of £2.6 billion. It will also include British Gas Service, the loss-making contract appliance maintenance arm.

Stripped of its gas supply business, the remaining British Gas company, provisionally renamed TransCo International, will have at its core ownership of Britain's £18 billion gas pipeline system. Operating under a price cap set by Ofgas, the gas regulator, this business will earn profits of around £700 million a year from fees paid by shippers, including British Gas Energy.

TransCo International will also include British Gas's overseas exploration, production, and distribution activities in Latin America, Asia and Eastern Europe, and its gas-burning power stations in Britain and overseas.

Cedric Brown, the 61-year-old chief executive of British Gas, is to retire at the company's annual meeting in April. But final proposals for the demerger, requiring approval by investors controlling 51 per cent of the shares, will not be tabled until the April 1997 meeting.

However, Ian Lang, President of the Board of Trade, has approved changes in British Gas's licence that will enable it to transfer assets into the new supply business. Executives to head the new businesses and oversee the integration will be named in early summer.

Richard Giordano, chairman of British Gas, said TransCo International will be a capital-intensive, long-term business operating in world markets, generating a steady stream of dividends. By contrast, British Gas Energy will seek to return funds to shareholders by way of dividends or share repurchases when it judges that circumstances make it appropriate to do so.

BGE will be loaded with £40 billion of take-or-pay contracts, with liabilities estimated at £1.5 billion. To balance these, British Gas has allotted the company its prized North and South Morecambe gasfields, capable of supplying 15 per cent of Britain's peak gas needs.

The first task of the new management will be to renegotiate gas-purchase contracts with 40 leading North Sea producers, at a time when spot prices are around half the level of British Gas's average 20p a therm contract price.

TransCo will end up with most of British Gas's debt, which at the end of the last financial year was £2.3 billion and has since risen by several hundred million. It will have assets of about £2.1 billion against the £2.6 billion in assets that will be held by British Gas Energy.

The splitting of British Gas will cost £50 million over the next 14 months in advisory and other fees (Patricia Tehan writes). British Gas has been working on its demerger plans for several months and costs have already begun to add up.

Brown study: the retiring Gas chief yesterday. Richard Giordano is in the background

Investors divided over break-up

By PATRICIA TEHAN

BRITISH GAS'S demerger plans brought starkly contrasting reactions from its shareholders. The most hostile came from the Pensions Investment Research Consultants (Pirc), which advises institutional shareholders on investments.

Anne Simpson, a Pirc director, said splitting British Gas into two businesses would not make the contract problem go away. Shareholders would still "own" the problem in the form of shares in the new company.

She said Cedric Brown was the fourth executive to receive increased salaries under British Gas's new pay policy and subsequently announce his retirement from the board. She urged British Gas to seek shareholder approval of its remuneration policy.

However, British Gas's bigger institutional investors were broadly in favour of the plans and expressed sympathy with Mr Brown. One said his firm had been irritated with British Gas's lack of openness about the contracts problem, but had sympathy with the view that when they had been signed the company was in a monopoly position. The demerger appeared to make sense as the company was essentially two different businesses. However, he said, "our view is that BGE will struggle".

Sir Anthony Beaumont-Dark, the former Conservative MP who chairs the TR High Income Trust which has £700,000 of British Gas shares, called for Mr Giordano to stand aside. He said his fund would vote against Mr Giordano taking on the chief executive's role when Mr Brown retires. "I hope other institutions will follow our lead," he said. However, his fund would back demerger, as the best solution to British Gas's problems, he said.

Long journey from fitter to chief executive's chair

By MARIANNE CURPHEY

IN SPITE OF his many achievements, the name of Cedric Brown will always be associated with a 30-stone pig that buried its snout in a bucket labelled Share Options outside a British Gas shareholders' meeting last summer.

Cedric the pig was brought along to the annual meeting by a band of small shareholders furious at what they claimed were the excessive pay and perks of BG's top directors. Their protest set the tone for one of the stormiest AGMs the City has seen. More than 4,500 small shareholders attended to vote against the reappointment of four directors, but proxy votes from institutional investors holding 97 per cent of the votes won the day.

The bluff Yorkshireman who rose from gas fitter to BG chief executive over 44 years, put the episode down to "part of life's rich experience". Colleagues say it was his combination of an iron will and a driving ambition that kept him going that day. Mr Brown says his time as an engineer taught him to solve problems through practical measures, although his critics portray him as a man steeped in the utility culture with little experience of the outside world.

He left school at 16 to become a laboratory assistant with the East Midlands Gas Board. Then, 22 years later, he became East Midlands director of engineering and was thrust on to the management fast track. A head office post came three years later, and in 1980 he was put in charge of BG's first big offshore development, the Morecambe Bay gas field.

He was made chief executive in 1992. In November 1994, he gained £205,000 rise, bringing his salary to £475,000.

A survivor with no intention of bowing out of the fray

By ERIC REGULY AND ALASDAIR MURRAY

RICHARD GIORDANO, the former New York lawyer who became non-executive chairman of British Gas two years ago, has emerged as a survivor in the company's restructuring. Mr Giordano will replace Cedric Brown initially as chief executive. His basic salary of £450,000, however, will not be increased.

Mr Giordano, who was chief executive of BOC Group before joining British Gas, was supposed to have worked only three days a week.

Instead, he found that defending Mr Brown's salary and overseeing a company under severe competitive threat were full-time jobs. He will have ultimate responsibility for the success of British Gas's split into two separately listed companies.

Mr Giordano has no intention of leaving when the demerger is finished in the spring of 1997. He wants to become non-executive chairman of both BGE and Transco.

Relations between Mr Giordano and the seven non-executive directors, who are charged with ensuring that shareholders' rights are protected during the demerger process, are said to have deteriorated during the past year.

There is a good chance that Philip Rogerson, 51, an executive director, whose portfolio includes the pipeline and overseas development divisions, will become chief executive of TransCo. Roy Gardner, who succeeded Mr Rogerson as finance director in 1994, is thought to be gunning for the chief executive's position at BGE.

CI put into administration

By PHILIP BASSETT INDUSTRIAL EDITOR

COAL privatisation claimed its first casualty yesterday when Coal Investments, the UK's second-largest mining group, was placed in administration after the breakdown of a rescue attempt.

Administrators said they planned to carry on trading, while they considered options.

CI, set up by Malcolm Edwards, the former British Coal marketing director, three years ago, applied yesterday to the High Court for an order under the 1986 Insolvency Act after lengthy talks with the company's three bankers.

The company said administrators had been brought in after its banks failed to agree on an attempt to raise new cash. The company said that Union Bank of Switzerland had asked for administrators to be appointed after differing with NatWest and Banque Indosuez over a plan to extend debt facilities.

CI, which has also been

Edwards set up company

trying to raise cash in the City, had used up its £30 million borrowing facility and was looking for another £5 million to help it to increase capacity.

National Power, the electricity generator, confirmed that it had been involved in talks over a possible rescue deal for the company.

The court appointed three partners from Arthur Andersen, the accountant, as joint administrators. They held

Factory output fall worst since 1992

By JANET BUSH, ECONOMICS CORRESPONDENT

MANUFACTURING activity slumped unexpectedly badly in December, leading to the weakest quarterly performance since early 1992 and making the City even more certain that base rates will fall further in the weeks ahead.

Manufacturing output fell 0.7 per cent, having declined 0.1 per cent in November, according to the Central Statistical Office. Output fell 0.2 per cent in the final quarter, compared with the previous three months. The CSO says it now estimates that there is zero underlying growth in the sector.

Industrial production, which includes energy production, rose 0.4 per cent in December as cold weather boosted demand for gas and electricity. But even in this series, the CSO estimates that growth is running at about only 0.5 per cent a year. There are few betting on the third base rate cut in a row after today's monthly monetary meeting between Kenneth Clarke, the Chancellor, and Eddie George, Governor of the Bank of England. But many expect that rates will be cut by another quarter point at the meeting next month.

Ian Shepherdson, UK economist at HSBC Markets, said: "If these figures don't frighten the authorities, nothing will. The outlook for the next few months is bleak."

Economists put the sharp decline in manufacturing down to companies aggressively selling out of the substantial stockpiles built up last year when demand slowed unexpectedly sharply. This phenomenon is expected to continue for some months and to continue to depress overall economic growth.

PHONE US if you need your HAIR CUT. Your new Aston

Martin Vantage picked up from the factory.

A CUP of COFFEE. (Just the way you like it.) A game of squash with the out-going CHAIRMAN. And someone to CONFIDE IN on a serious business matter.

MAINE-TUCKER
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS
16-21 Jermyn Street, St James's, London SW1Y 6HP

Who else offers a 100% three-month refund guarantee on permanent Secretaries, PAs and Administrators? Or a 15 minute call back on Temp bookings? For exceptional people phone an exceptional company on 0171 734 7341.

□ British Gas ring-fences its obligations □ Collapse of Malcolm Edwards's dream □ Dangers of running down staff

Through the Looking Glass

WE all seem to have stepped into one of those funny little parallel worlds, dreamt of by theoretical physicists, where the Spanish Armada won, perhaps, or Rome never fell, or Jeremy Beadle became prime minister.

We used to live in a world where you signed deals and were required to honour them. We woke up in a place where a business can shrug off its responsibilities like a snake shedding its skin.

British Gas is splitting in two, with the Government's blessing, please note, so the good bits can sail happily and profitably into the sunset. The bad bits are lumped together in one big sack tied up with assets of unquantifiable value, and cast adrift to see if they will float. This may be the easiest way out of the take-or-pay contracts quandary, but it sets an awful precedent.

The concept of ring-fencing doubtful debts is an old one, if not especially honourable. You lend a thousand pounds to a subsidiary knowing well that if trading conditions turn sour, the liquidators can be put in how-ever much cash is held by the parent — a hard lesson learned a year ago by creditors of the Athens chain when Petros put the shops into receivership.

What British Gas is doing is extending this a step further, creating a sort of retrospective ring-fencing. You are owed a thousand by company A. You receive a letter explaining that due to difficult trading, the company has been split into company B (quite possibly bust) and company C (highly profitable). Your debt, alas, is with company B, it has been decided. Would five hundred quid do?

The North Sea producers were always going to have to bear much of the cost of those contracts because neither the consumer nor the taxpayer could accept any pain so close to an election, and British Gas could not afford to shoulder the burden alone.

But from now, the tougher the producers are in negotiations, which they say have yet to begin in earnest, the more likely the company holding those contracts is to fold. For this to happen, and for a company of Gas's reputation effectively to walk away from its obligations, is unthinkable — one can only hope.

Gas even has its own purpose-built scapegoat in Cedric Brown, who has to spend another couple of months in the public stocks in return for his contractual entitlement and a cushy retirement. This neatly diverts attention from the role of Dick Giordano, even if his arrival as chairman two years ago did little to stem the group's abrupt decline.

Note also the inactivity of well-rewarded but supine non-executives including Peter, now Lord, Walker. His Energy Department first privatised the brute, with a promise of undying domestic market monopoly that allowed yet more of those disastrous North Sea contracts to be signed subsequently. What a tolerant lot they must be in the British Gas boardroom, to keep him around for so long.

Dog days for the privatisation ideal

ALLEGATIONS of fraud on the railways, a demerger at British Gas, fat cats in the utility boardrooms, no water in the pipes in Yorkshire. Even Conservative ministers admit privately that the ideological crown jewel of privatisation has lost some of its shine.

Coal Investments' admin-

PENNINGTON

istrators were keen to point out yesterday that the company is still trading while they examine the options, but the move into legal protection marks a further moment in the souring of the privatisation ideal.

If Coal Investments' troubles are not on the scale of Gas or the trains, this is only because the company is the much smaller RJB, the cost of rejuvenating old capacity, rather than RJB's business of running going-concern pits, has prompted more cashflow difficulties than banks have been able to stomach.

Accusations of bad faith, broken deals, overconfidence and overselling will now abound, no doubt. But the sorry road to the High Court yesterday may say energy competition. Some of it has indeed worked out: few would now dispute, for example, the claims of Tower Colliery in South Wales to be a success.

Malcolm Edwards, British Coal's former marketing director, looked like he would dominate this new world. Rapidly out of Hobart House after clashing with the chairman, Neil Clarke, Edwards and his Coal Investments sold themselves hard to the City and to the generators as the key player in coal's post-privatisation landscape.

But the fatal blow for Mr Edwards looked to be when England's deep mines were handed out to rival Richard Budge's RJB Mining. Though the company's coal reserves in its pits are greater, if anything, than RJB's, the cost of rejuvenating old capacity, rather than RJB's business of running going-concern pits, has prompted more cashflow difficulties than banks have been able to stomach.

Accusations of bad faith, broken deals, overconfidence and overselling will now abound, no doubt. But the sorry road to the High Court yesterday may say as much about the tarnished reality of some privatisations as it does about the company which ended up there.

Stocking up for another recession

ONE could be forgiven for seeing Armageddon in yesterday's slump in manufacturing, but the very dreadfulness of the figures contains the seed of renewed growth.

The sharp contraction in output has probably come as firms meet demand from the huge stock levels built up last year. This aggressive destocking suggests that there is some demand out there. The sooner that stocks return to more normal levels, the sooner growth can resume. This should make the stocks cycle a temporary blip, a matter of timing which does not affect the overall path of the economy.

But therein lies the danger. The current cycle is quite extreme. In the first nine months of last year, around 1 per cent of the 1.4 per cent growth in GDP was due simply to the build up of stocks. Theoretically, the same will have to come off GDP, and manufacturing may even enter technical recession. It is then crucial how companies react in terms of staffing levels.

If they ride out the stocks cycle and hang on to staff, they can probably look forward to a bright second half. But if they start to shed labour — and the announcement by Jaguar yesterday is a warning — the outlook is rather less promising.

Jobs go, consumer confidence and spending falls, the Chancellor misses his growth and public borrowing targets, taxes do not fall again in the autumn. Calamity for the Government, for the economy, and for us all.

First principle

ALISTAIR DEFRIEZ at SBC Warburg helped defend Ford in a battle that was ultimately lost in part because Granada promised to pay a special dividend out of Ford's funds. Mr Defriez is now at the Takeover Panel, the first principle of whose code states that all shareholders must be treated equally — a principle apparently contravened by such dividends, which offer tax advantages to some. Mr Defriez said last night it was too early for him to comment on this happy coincidence. No doubt eventually he will get around to it.

BSkyB plans to offer pay-per-view channels

By ERIC REGULY

BSkyB, the satellite broadcaster, said that it planned to introduce pay-per-view programming by the end of this year and confirmed that it wanted to supply news to the ITV network.

Information on the expansion plans of BSkyB, which is 40 per cent owned by News International, owner of The Times, came as the company reported its strongest set of interim profits since its formation in 1990. It also announced a maiden interim dividend of 2.5p.

BSkyB said it would launch the pay-per-view channels in analogue form, once it found enough spectrum space. Items to be broadcast would include films and sporting events. The same film, for example, could be broadcast every 30 minutes in the evening, allowing subscribers to pick their viewing time.

Sam Chisholm, chief executive, said that the pay-per-view service "will create a brand new market".

Meanwhile, the company is pressing ahead with plans to start digital services, a move that would greatly expand the number of channels on offer.

David Elstein, head of programming, said that BSkyB was seeking to end the monopoly held by Independent Television News in supplying news to ITV. The Broadcasting Act 1993 called for competition in that business. ITV's current contract with ITN,

Sam Chisholm announcing a profit rise yesterday worth about £57 million a year, expires next year. BSkyB's pre-tax profit for the half year to the end of December almost doubled to £106.3 million on turnover of £464 million, up 30 per cent.

Earnings per share were 5.6p against 3.3p. A sharp rise in the number of subscribers was behind the results. BSkyB took on a record 568,000 new subscribers in the half-year period, raising its total to 5.2 million. Revenue from direct-to-home satellite customers rose 26 per cent to £337.8 million, while advertising revenue was up 18 per cent to £50.7 million.

The interim dividend will be paid on April 11. The shares closed down 22p at 392p. Traders said the decision by John Bridgeman, Director General of Fair Trading, to refer BSkyB's agreement covering TV rights to Premier League football matches to the Restrictive Practices Court was behind the share slide.

GMTV, the breakfast station launched in 1993, reported its first profits yesterday and said that the worst trading days were behind it.

The company had an operating profit of £1 million in 1995, against a loss of £1.6 million in 1994 and £10.8 million previous year. It said that the turnaround was down to an 8 per cent growth in advertising revenue, to £50 million, plus a substantial increase in programme sponsorship revenue.

GMTV was also able to repay a £4 million loan to its owners, Carlton Communications, Granada, Scottish Television, Guardian Media Group and the Walt Disney Company.

Last year's profits came after payments of £48 million, covering the licence fee and a percentage of advertising revenue, to the Government. GMTV hopes to negotiate lower payments in 1999.

Matthey in $40m hi-tech US deal

JOHNSON MATTHEY, the industrial holding company, is adding to its burgeoning interests in advanced technology materials with the acquisition of the in-house printed circuit board (PCB) interests of Cray Research in America for $40 million.

The proposed acquisition stems from Johnson Matthey's $170 million acquisition of Advanced Circuits, a market leader in high-technology PCBs and in plastic laminate packaging for semiconductors. Under the Cray deal, Johnson Matthey will acquire land, buildings, plant and machinery, and a workforce of around 350 people. The Cray facility at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, is considered one of the most advanced in America.

Johnson Matthey shares rose 2p to 561p yesterday.

Tempos, page 28

BT alliance to expand services in Germany

By MARTIN BARROW

BRITISH Telecom will today unveil a strategic alliance with RWE and Viag, two leading German utility companies, as it seeks to expand its international business.

The joint venture will offer services over fixed networks for business and private customers in Germany, and will operate independently of BT's Viag Interkon venture established last year.

The first stage would involve forming a joint network company that would combine fixed network activities in Germany. This could be expanded to include mobile phone services and satellite communications.

The three companies will sign a letter of intent in Bonn today, with a final agreement expected by the middle of this year. Neither RWE nor Viag has a mobile phone concession in Germany, but it is expected they will bid when the next licence is awarded.

Bonfield: EC request

RWE had previously been a shareholder in CNI Communications Network International, a joint venture with Mannesmann and Deutsche Bank but pulled out over differences in strategy and control with Mannesmann. CNI has subsequently signed a letter of intent to form an alliance with Unisource, a joint venture between America's AT&T, Swedish group Telia and the main telephone operators in The Netherlands, Spain and Switzerland.

BT, whose chief executive is Sir Peter Bonfield, yesterday asked the European Commission to examine the competition implications of North American technology being used by Unisource to provide one-stop telecoms services to multinational corporations.

BT believes that Unisource is likely to adopt AT&T software and standards for services such as private voice networks and fears this could lock the European partners into buying American hardware, restricting competition.

Eurostar journeys increase threefold

By JONATHAN PEYIN, TRANSPORT CORRESPONDENT

MORE than 1,000 high-speed Eurostar passenger trains passed through the Channel Tunnel between London, Paris and Brussels last month, a threefold increase over January last year, Eurotunnel announced yesterday.

A total of 1,071 high-speed Eurostars sped through the tunnel in January, against just 318 in January 1995.

There were also dramatic increases in the number of cars, motorcycles, trailers, caravans, campervans and coaches using Eurotunnel's shuttle trains, with an increase from 45,352 vehicles in January 1995 to 98,799 last month.

A total of 45,763 trucks went through the tunnel on freight shuttle trains last month — more than double the 20,739 of January 1995. Through-freight trains last month totalled 536, up from 368 in January 1995.

The figures remain far short of forecasts made at the time of the 1994 rights issue. Just over three million passengers used Eurostar last year, against a forecast 9.2 million in Eurotunnel's prospectus. Five million passengers are expected to use the train in 1996.

The prospectus also forecast total freight traffic of 11.14 million gross tonnes in 1995. Latest government figures suggest an actual figure of about 4.5 million tonnes.

Tempos, page 28

Record $3.1m fine for Sara Lee

FROM A CORRESPONDENT IN WASHINGTON

SARA LEE, the American consumer products company, has been ordered to pay a record $3.1 million fine for failing to notify US antitrust authorities before the acquisition of assets from Reckitt and Colman.

The Justice Department filed the suit and settlement agreement in the US District Court, claiming that Sara Lee violated antitrust notification requirements with its 1991 purchase of the shoe care products division of Reckitt & Colman for about $25.8 million. The complaint said that the contract failed to provide a fair market value for the US assets.

Sara Lee gave a low estimate of the US assets, claiming that it was not required to report the transaction because the assets were worth less than the $15 million limit.

At the time of the acquisition, Sara Lee and its Kiwi division had a 90 per cent share of the US shoe polish market — Reckitt & Colman's Griffin was one of the few remaining competitors.

"The law is simple and clear. So is Sara Lee's violation," said Anne Bingham, assistant attorney general. "Sara Lee flouted its legal requirements in order to frustrate legal scrutiny."

Officials said the penalty was the highest ever imposed under the 1976 Hart-Rodino antitrust law.

Water failure is investigated

By CHRISTINE BUCKLEY

THE inquiry into what went wrong with Yorkshire water supplies last year began yesterday when Professor John Uff, leading the inquiry funded by Yorkshire Water, declared a fully public and open government investigation. He said: "This is a completely open debate and I hope the MPs will take part so they can see it constitutes what they are calling for."

Professor Uff, an engineering expert with arbitration experience, said that the inquiry would produce guidelines for maintaining water supply. He said: "We must never get to the situation again when we have to have tanking."

Last year, Yorkshire Water, whose leakage rate has been calculated at 33 per cent, one of the highest in the developed world, ran tankers from the Tees to maintain supplies after last year's dry summer lowered reservoir stocks to about 10 per cent of capacity.

Professor Uff aims to deliver his report which will have fundamental implications for all privatised water companies, by the end of April after he has considered written evidence and held two weeks of public hearings. The report will go to Yorkshire Water, whose chairman, Sir Gordon Jones, last year said that he wished to leave before his compulsory retirement date of next year, and to contributors. Professor Uff said that he was confident that the report would pass into the public domain swiftly.

Yorkshire Water said it hoped the inquiry would lead to the creation of standards of service for the industry.

Jones: sought to retire

Telephone Share Dealing

The bargain bargain.

(£25 for a £2,500 deal)

Whatever the value of your transaction, you'll find our dealing charges are very competitive. We charge 1% on the first £4,000 of each deal (minimum £20) and 0.1% thereafter.

So, whether your deal is £2,500 or £10,000, it's a bargain. As well as low costs, NatWest BrokerLine offers you:

- Easy access and personal service.
- Real-time dealing. You can normally deal at the price given over the phone.
- Prompt and reliable settlement, five working days from the date of dealing.

And you have the reassurance of dealing with NatWest Stockbrokers, who handle around one in ten transactions for private individuals on the London Stock Exchange.

Call BrokerLine on 0800 515 780

MONDAY to FRIDAY 8.00am to 5.00pm.

Simply dial and deal, or alternatively telephone BrokerLine now on 0800 515 780 if you'd like further information.

NatWest
More than just a bank

*Stamp Duty at 0.5% will be payable on purchases of UK equities and a Stock Exchange levy of £1 is payable on individual deals over £10,000. Please bear in mind that the value of stock market investments, and the income from them, may go down as well as up, and you may not recover the amount of your original investment. National Westminster Bank Plc is regulated by the Personal Investment Authority and (MRO). Share dealing services are provided by NatWest Stockbrokers Limited, a member of the London Stock Exchange and regulated by the Securities and Futures Authority. National Westminster Bank Plc Registered Office: 11 Leadenhall Street, London EC3A 3BP. Registered Number: 229027, England. Ref No: 19550

Figure 1

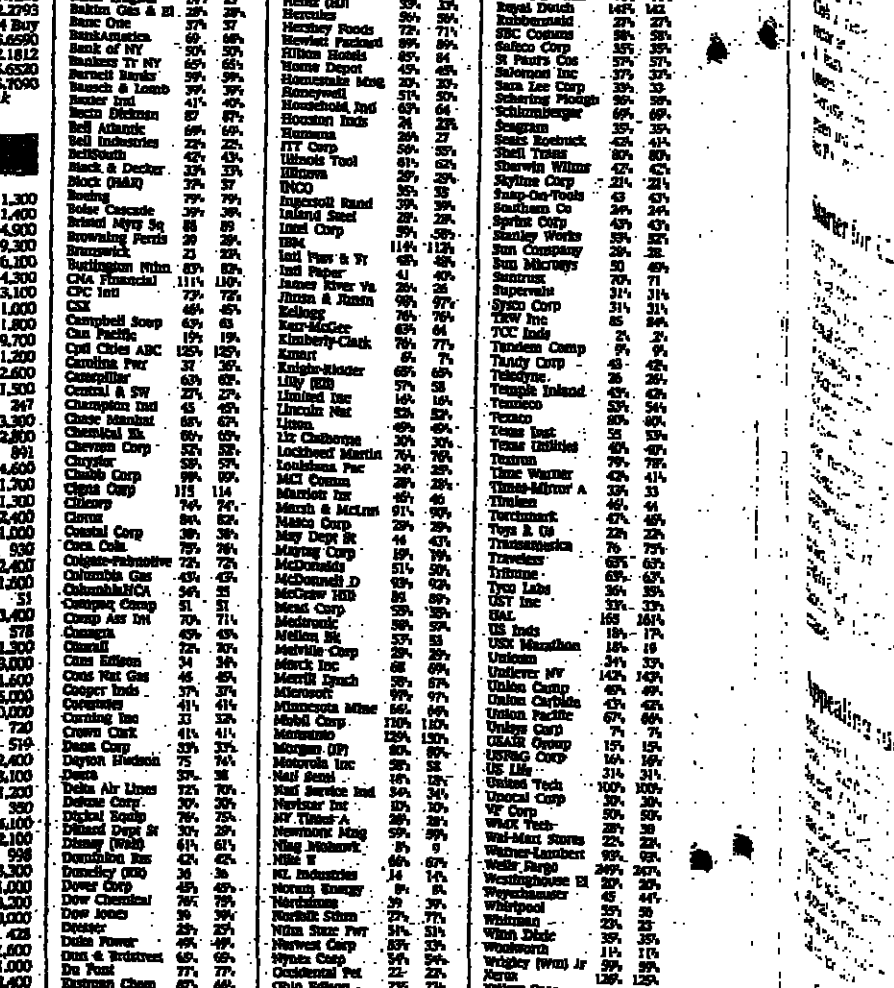

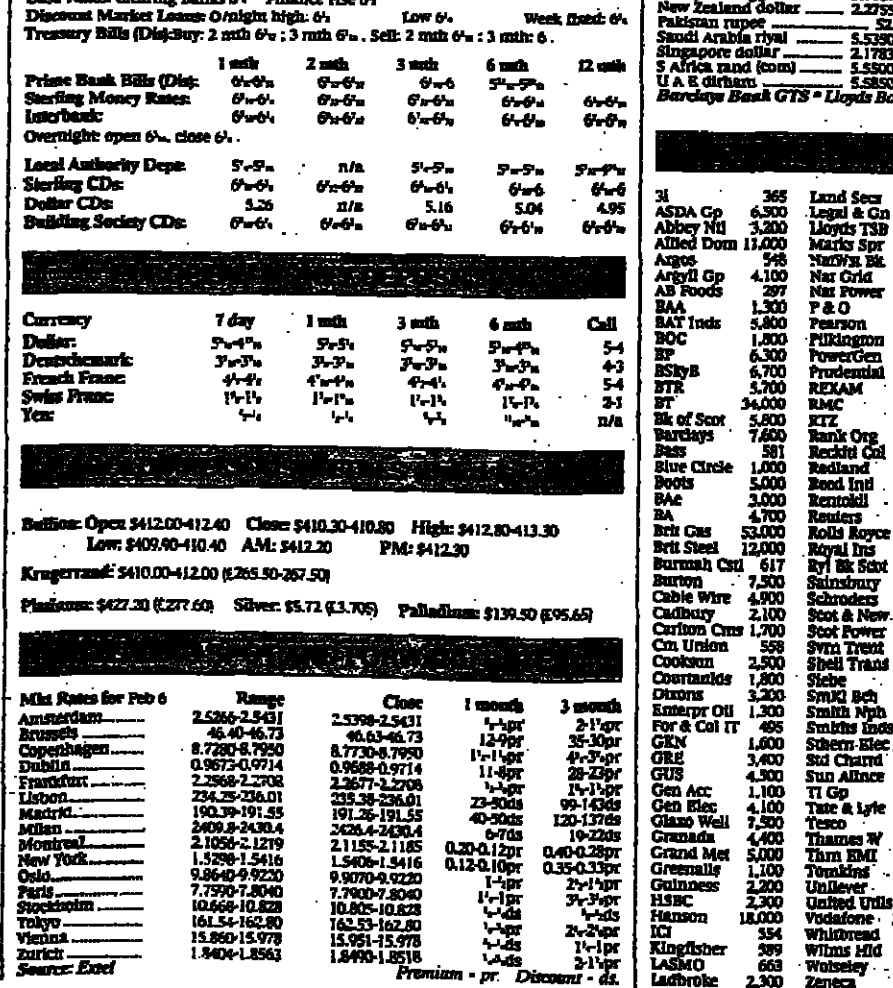

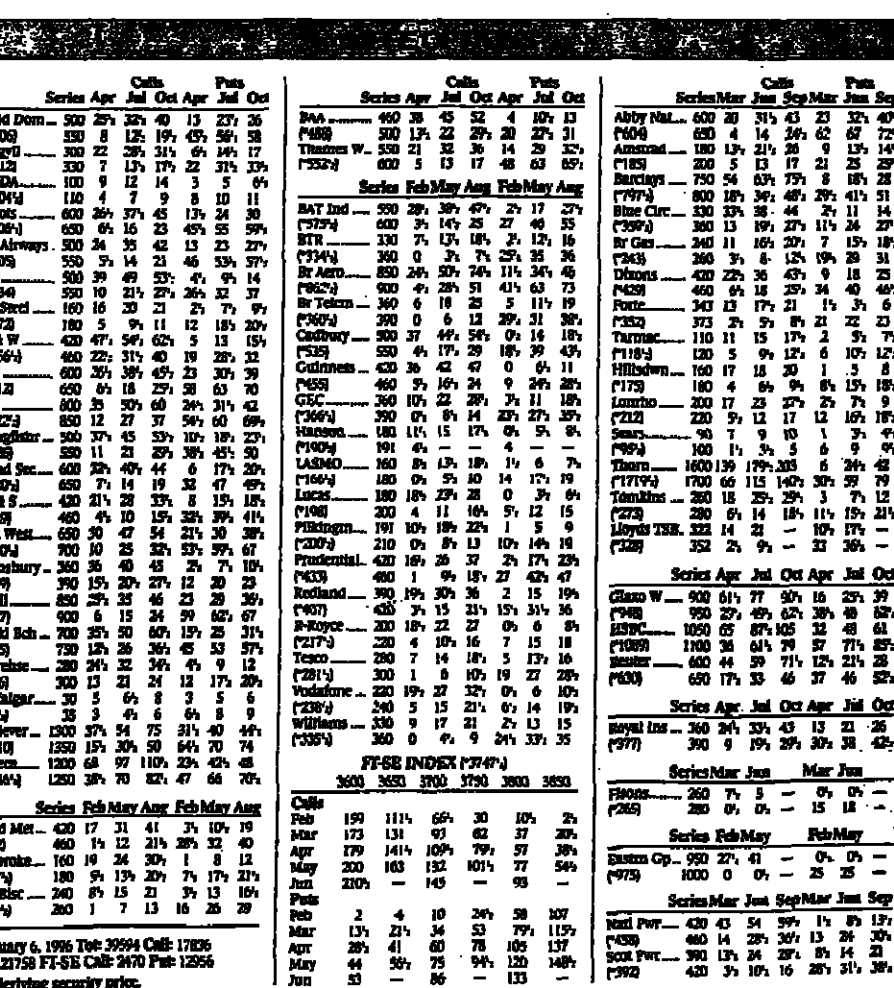

... ..

Cleaning Flood Damage

(The following information was obtained from the records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.)

The figure consists of two parts. The top part shows a 1D lattice chain with sites labeled 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100. The hopping parameters are t and t' . The bottom part shows a chain with a defect at site n , with hopping parameters t and t' .

1410

100

• Journal of the American Medical Association, 2000; 284: 1039-1044

THE TIMES CITY DIARY

Cedric waves goodbye to tact

CEDRIC BROWN, who has managed to irritate most of British Gas's 1.6 million shareholders and many of its 19 million customers was in danger yesterday of offending the most important man at the privatised company — Richard Giordano — who will effectively be chairman and chief executive from May.

Brown insisted he is retiring because British Gas will be turning itself into a "new management" and "new management" teams will be appointed... and they will want two young chief executives.

He added: "They don't want old men staggering around."

If Giordano didn't wince at the man on whom he had just lavished praise, he should have.

Brown, who was born on March 7, 1935, is almost a year his junior. His grand "old" chairman Giordano turns 62 on March 24.

Sitting uneasily

THE sale by Hambros Bank of its mining subsidiary brings with it some unexpected dividends. Hugh Jenkins, the former investment director of the Prudential, has found office space within Hambros Tower Hill premises for the time being at least. Jenkins, who is now executive director of such organisations as Rank, Thorn EMI and Garmore, as well as being the chairman of Hambros Falcon property trust, should not get too comfortable, however, as the bank is planning to move the occupants of its Brentwood office down to Tower Hill and, of course, there could well be increasing competition for the desk.

ACCOUNTS DEPT

"We are demerging the profit account from the loss account"

New ball game

BRIAN QUINN has been hailed a "missionary" at the Bank of England where he has worked for 26 years, latterly responsible for banking supervision and surveillance. He retires on February 29, and the next day joins his beloved Celtic Football Club as non-executive director and vice-chairman. A bank colleague said Quinn "tried to convert everyone, and even put a green and white poster in his PA's office".

Starter for £2,000

CITY types will be brushing up their buzzer skills for the St John Ambulance annual Brain Game general knowledge quiz at the Guildhall tomorrow, won last year by law firm Allen & Overy. For the fourth year running, the question-master will be sports commentator Dickie Davies. At £2,000 a team ticket, it's all to raise £50,000 for St John Ambulance, the Lord Mayor's charity.

Appealing idea

MICHAEL JACKAMAN, who is standing down at the end of March as chairman of Allied Domecq, has decided how he will be spending his retirement. He is to be chairman of an appeal to raise £20 million for a new children's hospital in Bristol.

COLIN CAMPBELL

Demerger offers lifeline for dinosaur monopoly

Ross Tieman looks at how British Gas has had to come to terms with a more competitive market

Ten years after flotation as a vast monopoly, British Gas is breaking itself up. The decision to demerge the business that supplies gas to 19 million homes and a third of Britain's businesses is a logical response to the piecemeal introduction of competition over the past decade.

With the last vestiges of its guaranteed market on the verge of being prised open, the board, under American Richard Giordano, has concluded that British Gas is a dinosaur, incapable of survival in today's cut-throat world. Only by reinventing itself, in two parts, can it thrive.

At a special meeting in April next year, the company's 1.6 million shareholders will be asked to approve the creation of a new listed company.

Provisionally called British Gas Energy, this will contain the gas supply business, selling gas to families and businesses; the service business, looking after appliance maintenance; a gas trading arm, called Accord; and the North and South Morecambe gasfields, accounting for 15 per cent of United Kingdom peak demand.

If the proposal is approved by holders of 51 per cent of British Gas shares, the company's investors will receive free shares in British Gas Energy. They will also retain their shares in the far larger residual business, provisionally named TransCo International.

This will own the pipeline system, delivering gas for shippers, including British Gas Energy, in return for fees. It will also own the rest of British Gas's exploration, production and distribution activities — concentrated in Asia, South America and Eastern Europe — and its gas-fired power stations in Britain and overseas.

Such an outcome would have been inconceivable on that day 30 years ago, when the first gas from the newly discovered southern North Sea basin was piped ashore.

In the two decades that followed, Britain's coal-grimed town centre gasworks, with their coking ovens and gasometers, were progressively levelled. In their place, British Gas's state-owned monopoly built a high-pressure network of pipelines and mains beneath the streets, delivering natural gas to almost every sizeable town in England, Wales and southern Scotland.

It was a formidable engineering achievement, and the envy of many countries overseas. At privatisation, in 1986, gas had come to account for 50 per cent of Britain's primary energy consumption, from just seven per cent two decades earlier.

By the time the Government got around to selling British Gas with its celebrated "Tell Sid" advertising campaign in 1986, many politicians and academics already had their doubts about privatising monopolies. When British Telecom was sold two years earlier, the Government had licensed Mercury Communications, owned by Cable and Wireless, to build a rival phone network.

But intense lobbying by Sir Denis Rooke, the tough and abrasive British Gas chairman, combined with the desire of Lord Walker, the then Energy Secretary, to maximise proceeds from the sale. It was inconceivable that anyone could afford to build a rival pipeline network. Gas distribution was deemed a "natural monopoly" and left intact. The company was sold with a 25-year monopoly of the gas market under 25,000 terms, giving only big business the right to choose alternative suppliers.

But once the Government had tucked away its £5.43 billion sale proceeds, the gas regulator, Sir James McKinnon, quickly began to pick away at this cosy arrangement.

Although Sir Denis and his successors resisted at every turn, Sir James gradually turned competition into reality for business customers. He forced British Gas to charge realistic prices for gas delivery, and also

British Gas intends to split its operations into two separate companies snipped away at the myriad bindings that impeded efforts by customers to buy their gas elsewhere.

Because of its statutory obligation to ensure that gas supplies would be maintained, even on the coldest winter day, British Gas bought virtually all the North Sea gas output, on contracts lasting up to 40 years. At one point, Sir James was obliged to introduce a "gas release" scheme, simply so that rivals could obtain adequate supplies.

This stubborn resistance to competition sowed the seeds of British Gas's biggest troubles today. Producers responded by putting in hand the development of massive new capacity. Today, the spot price of gas has halved, rivals can undercut, and British Gas has more fuel than its diminishing band of customers can burn. Moreover, it is paying more than the market price for the fuel.

Quite why British Gas continued signing long-term contracts despite mounting evidence that the Government would tear up its monopoly remains a puzzle. Successive reports from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission showed which way the wind was blowing. The first, in 1988, obliged the company to publish tariffs to industrial and commercial users, paving the way for a massive loss of market share.

In a surprise move in May 1992, Tim Eggar, the Energy Minister, abruptly cut the competition threshold from 25,000 tonnes to 2,500 tonnes. A subsequent two-year inquiry, triggered in July by Cedric Brown, chief executive, in an effort to clarify the pace at which competition was to spread, tore up the privatisation deal.

The Monopolies and Mergers Commission concluded that British Gas should be obliged to separate its pipelines business from its supply arm, so that the entire market, including 19 million homes, could be opened to competition. But the timetable for the separation was to be a gentle one, stretching into the next century to minimise the trauma.

Ministers bought the idea, but spurned the patience. The Government then drafted a new Gas Act, passed last autumn, which opens the household market to competition progressively by January 1, 1999. A pilot trial for the phased opening, embracing half a million homes in the South West, is running late but is set to start in May or June this year.

TransCo, operator of British Gas's £18 billion pipeline network, is already, to all intents and purposes, a stand-alone company. It generates profits of around £700 million a year in spite of its prices being capped by the regulator. TransCo is the cash-cow funding overseas expansion in oil/gas exploration and production, distribution and power generation. These businesses, which will form TransCo International, are the heart of the existing British Gas.

Demerging British Gas Energy is largely designed to spin off the problems arising from the company's failure to respond effectively to the faster than expected loss of its monopoly. Since being allowed to abandon publication of tariffs, British Gas Energy has arrested the decline of its share of commercial and industrial markets at 35 per cent. But its deliveries to households can only fall as competition takes root.

That will increase the company's gas surplus, making it all the more urgent to renegotiate take-or-pay contracts with North Sea gas producers, which are also being dumped in BGE. To offset these liabilities, currently estimated at £1.5 billion, BGE will be bolstered with the key assets of British Gas's Morecambe gasfields in the Irish Sea. All these uncertainties and liabilities will make for an explosive cocktail. Shares in BGE will be a speculator's play, not for the faint hearted, and certainly not for widows and orphans.

Even TransCo International will be a far cry from the steady-as-she-goes utility sold to the public in 1986. But with Cedric Brown, 40 years in the industry, goes the last of the British Gas old guard. The new companies will have younger managers, trained in the private sector.

At last British Gas has bowed to the logic of its increasingly competitive market. Perhaps the new companies may at last begin to reward, rather than fail, their shareholders.

Post Office still delivering in political storm

Privatisation of the Royal Mail is an issue once more, Philip Bassett says

In the next few weeks, business and consumers will receive an unhappy jolt to outgoings when the Post Office announces a price rise — of probably 1p on stamps — which will also affect the Government's efforts to control inflation.

Politics and the post are interwoven, and the two come into play today when MPs debate the future of the Post Office. The Labour-sponsored debate has been prompted by the raising of the issue by the Prime Minister, of the possibility of privatising the Post Office. John Major last month surprised many Conservative MPs when he said that the Government would consider whether to include a new attempt to privatise the Royal Mail in its general election manifesto.

"I think it will be in," says one minister. "The benefits of including it are twofold: it takes the agenda forward, and shows we are not being complacent. And it does give a positive focus on privatisation, after a couple of years in which — because of British Gas and other things — it has not gone as well as it should."

After failing to privatise the Post Office two years ago, when, in spite of efforts led by Michael Heseltine, ministers could not muster a majority of its own backbenchers for the move, returning to the issue might appear to be somewhere between brave and desperate.

Labour will argue that Mr Major's suggestion, which followed similar musings by Mr Heseltine and Kenneth Clarke, the Chancellor, is engendered by internal politics of the Conservative Party — John Major's need to offer some red meat to the Tory Right.

Kim Howells, Labour's spokesman on the Post Office, says: "This is entirely driven by Major's desire to emphasise that he is not scared to take on the most controversial issues."

Phillip Oppenheim, the Industry Minister, will attack what he sees as Labour's lack of detailed, practical policy on the Post Office and will emphasise the Post Office's performance under the Conservatives, and says: "There is a strong case on investment by the Post Office, which, in real terms, is double what it was 15 years ago."

The Government's aim is to give the Post Office as much commercial freedom as it can, without going as far as the Post Office wants — "We're not going to allow them to sell condoms," says one Department of Trade and Industry source — because of the effect on competitors of a Post Office free to do whatever it likes in the high street.

Labour's problem with the Post Office is as acute, and in some ways a test of whether some policies promoted by Tony Blair work in practice. For a Labour government, would there be a realistic middle way between the two extremes that Mr Blair rejects, of untrammelled free markets and privatisation, and of the old nationalised control?

Both political parties, too, face the difficulty of wearing themselves off the cash that the Post Office provides for the Treasury. To the annoyance of its senior managers, the Post Office faces contributing close to £1 billion over the next three years to the Government's cash flow. They doubt that Labour could resist the milch cow any more than can the Conservatives.

When Bill Cockburn was its chief executive, the Post Office was seen to have painted itself into a corner — seeking privatisation, and with nowhere to go when denied it. Mr Cockburn is now with WH Smith, and his successor, John Roberts, wants to draw a line under the insecurity of the past three years, while the Government considered its future, and to concentrate on winning business in Europe and the US, as European postal businesses and other communications eat into the Post Office's market.

If that means rejection of Mr Major's dalliance with privatisation, so be it. Post Office managers calculate that, to proceed, the Government would need to be re-elected with a majority of 20, and consider that unlikely on poll evidence. So the Post Office is buckling down to business, leaving the politicians to it, but knowing that the next election is crucial for Britain's postal services.

The Open University BUSINESS/SCHOOL

Be a more effective manager in just 6 months

Now you can gain the management skills you need to succeed in a changing world — without taking time off work.

The Open University Business School offers six-month courses to help you plan and manage change, recruit and motivate people, resolve conflicts, make decisions, manage stress and delight customers.

As world leaders in supported distance learning, we offer everything you need to make learning effective and enjoyable. You work in your own time, at your own pace. But your personal tutor is only a phone call away, and you can meet fellow students through study groups and residential schools.

All OUBS courses are backed by over 25 years' experience in distance learning. Our methods and materials were given the highest rating of 'excellence' by the Higher Education Funding Council England.

For details of our courses return the coupon. Or call the 24-hour OUBS Hotline.

Business is changing. Are you?

Send to: Customer Service Centre, PO Box 625, Milton Keynes MK1 1TY.

Please send me ☐ Management development prospectus (the new prospectus will be published early February).

Name

Position

Organisation

Address

Postcode

Tel

OUBS Hotline 01908 654321

University education and training open to all adults

The village that was all but lost

From Helen J. A. Gibbons
Sir, It was good of Tempus to elevate the village of Ashted to a Surrey town, namesake of Ashted Group plc (Business News, February 1).

Thanks to overzealous parking restrictions in the late 1980s, followed by attempts by landlords to massively hike rent reviews, the village of Ashted was all but lost.

In space of a few years, the butcher, baker, watchmaker, ironmonger, cobbler, confectioner, travel agent and others disappeared. Some are now returning to join the public houses (three) and banks (five) able to ride the recession.

Yours faithfully,
HELEN GIBBONS,
10 Greycoat Place,
SWIP 1SB.

A&L flotation requires legitimate authority

From Mr Noel Falconer
Sir, By what authority does Alliance & Leicester propose to discriminate between its members "free share bonanza for A&L members." (February 1)? This must surely be in a form that the courts will recognise. Approval by the Building Societies Commission looks less than adequate. Retrospective action, after gaining from the situation that is being altered, as A&L has, with speculative deposits — is a breach of

The responsibility for mis-selling and compensation

From Mr K. D. Boyd
Sir, I believe regulation will never work. The pensions mis-selling arose largely because Andrew Large and others failed to see the pitfalls of deregulation of pensions. Now a scapegoat must be found. The next phase of this ideology will occur when actuaries in charge of pension funds are Satisfied pension policyholders need protection

From Mr Robin Hill
Sir, Much is being said on behalf of those who may have suffered through the alleged "mis-selling" of pensions but nothing on behalf of the very many long-established policyholders who are well satisfied with the advice received but are understandably concerned about the possible effect of any compensation payments on the performance of their own

Human factors in the employment equation

From J. T. Beckford
Sir, Why make such a mystery of the continued discrepancy between LFS and unemployment statistics ("Would real earnings growth spell economic suicide?", January 30). Some employers, in the interest of downsizing prestige and a tendency to discount casual or part-time labour, will deliberately minimise their workforce. At the same time, those recently laid off, for reasons of pride, shame or

Tecs in favour of efficiency survey

From Mr Chris Humphries
Sir, Your article "Freedom for Tecs urged in call for savings" (January 22, 1996) misrepresents the reaction of Tecs to the recently published Efficiency Survey. Tecs have supported the conduct of the Efficiency Survey since its outset in its attempt to simplify the level of imposed bureaucracy which surrounds their operation, and frustrates employers and training providers in serving the needs of staff and clients. Throughout the report, the need to maintain adequate levels of accountability for public funds is acknowledged, and the report seeks to identify ways by which that can be achieved whilst reducing unnecessary administrative burdens.

It was, in fact, the Tec National Council which wrote to Ministers asking that the report be implemented in full, and that there be "no cherry-picking" (although we didn't use that phrase). Ministers have, in turn, indicated to the council that they will give the report their fullest consideration. Yours faithfully,
CHRIS HUMPHRIES,
Director of Policy and Strategy,
Tec National Council
Westminster Tower,
3 Albert Embankment,
London SE1.

THE TIMES INTERNATIONAL

first direct

"I can settle my bills over the phone"

for 24 hour telephone banking

 0800 24 24 24

For full written details of our services write to First Direct, Postbox 10004, Leeds, LS20 2TB. First Direct is a division of Halifax.

Counting the cost of empty properties

● Empty Homes Agency, 0171-820 6288.

All 300 homes at Sovereign View have been sold ahead of the building programme and Barratt has acquired the adjoining riverside site, Pagant Steps, where it has started a further 83 houses and flats.

POSTCODE _____
day) _____ eve.) _____

PRIMESHARE
THE TIMESHARE BROKER AGENT

Achieving a happy wedding day requires meticulous planning. Sarah Harding has advice on the most important decision: the dress

Dressed to say I do

The proposal has been accepted, the ring is on the finger, and the announcement in the newspaper. For a moment life is a bed of roses. Then the full weight of the nuptial preparations dawns: where to find the photographers, typographers, car, dress and tent hire, the balloons, Benthleys and bridesmaids. And what about the dress, the big frock for the big moment? When it was my turn last year, I opted to wear my mother's dress, a 1962 "Camelet" design that was all the rage 30 years ago. It saved fuss and fittings, but it didn't stop me from taking a peek at what every good bride is now wearing.

Across the Channel at the French couturiers, the finale wedding dress shown a fortnight ago at the spring-summer '96 collection of Christian Lacroix comes, in his office's words, in "white, white, white" whirls of A-line duchesse satin. Christian Dior's is tight-fitting; Yves Saint Laurent's a colourful muslin affair in white, green and gold.

Back home, however, Jasper Conran, who created the streamlined silk georgette and organza dress with ruffled bodice for Lady Sarah Armstrong-Jones's marriage to Daniel Chatto, is finding that girls are avoiding frou-frou like yesterday's lover and bucking the couturier trend by favouring off-white.

This is supported by Caroline Castiglione, director of Castiglione (average cost of a dress £1,200-£1,500) — which sells Conran, Jenny Packham and David Fielding — and consultant to Liberty's bridal department (average cost of a dress £450-£2,500).

"Like Sarah Armstrong-Jones, girls want a very sleek, very simple style in ivory, a colour which suits the English skin tone," says Ms Castiglione. "Gone are the roses, bows and sequins associated with the dress that the Princess of Wales wore."

Cathy O'Neill, marketing and PR manager of Pronuptia (average spend on dress £300-£500), agrees: "Brides-to-be certainly come in asking to try on the sophisticated, straight lines. But once the dress is on, many change their minds. This is partly because it may not flatter their figure: partly because a meringue-style A-line suits their long-held notion of floating down the aisle. This is particularly true, it turns out, if they come in with their mothers, who tend to have shared the same romantic dreams about their daughters.

Trend setter: Lady Sarah Chatto

So if girls will be girls when it comes to sticking to fairy-tales, do they still wear long, floaty veils? "Less so," says Ms O'Neill. "Brides are older and want less fuss. Also, with the increase in civil settings, such as hotels, veils are becoming redundant."

It is a sentiment shared by bride Lucy Dillon, who made a bare-headed descent towards the altar last June: "I did not wear a veil because I don't like the materials that they are made out of. It worried me, too, that I would not be able to see where I was going — a bit like when you're goggles steam up when you're swimming..."

However, such groping about in the murky waters of bridal arrangements may be less frenzied from tomorrow until February 11, when Olympia, London, hosts the first National Wedding Show. Here all matters relating to the big day — including information about caterers, toastmasters, horses and carriages, florists and fine wines — will be shared among 150 stands.

A 50ft replica church will provide the backdrop for a catwalk launching outfits for brides, bridegrooms and mothers of the bride, as well as going-away outfits, swimwear and lingerie. Designers include Berkelex, Elizabeth Emanuel and Hollywood Dreams.

Employees of Brides and Setting Up Home magazine will be on hand to provide tips from cost-cutting to etiquette, and Wedding and Home magazine is giving hair and make-up demonstrations.

Prospective grooms can relax in the "men's canteen" watching sport on television and drinking beer, or take note of waistcoats by designers such as Lee Lamont. Tickets cost £7 on the day; £5 in advance. To reserve a ticket, call 01733 890187 (quoting reference DX). Six people can enter for £20 if tickets are booked in advance.

Froth from Lacroix's spring-summer '96 collection

RICHARD OGDEN LTD

Richard Ogden, famous for fine jewellery and an incomparable service. Specialists in beautifully hand made wedding rings and engagement rings. Brochure available. The Richard Ogden Ring Room 28 & 29 Burlington Arcade Piccadilly, London W1V 0NX Tel: 0171 493 9136/7 & 6239 Fax: 0171 355 1508

ROMANTIC JAZZ

Love songs of 20's, 30's, 40's and 50's played and sung in a smooth and mellow style creating that right blend of romance and sophistication with a hint of swing. ANDREW BRADLEY JAZZ TEL: 0181 539 0018

HAVING A PARTY, WEDDING, EVENT?

CB Hire Ltd. Glass, Linen, Furniture, Bedding, Pridges. Tel: 01451 861022

ARISTOCRAKES

WEDDING AND CELEBRATION CAKES. All hand made and personally decorated. Tel: 01923 228419

PEARL TRADERS UK

PO Box 9999, London SW1P 1ZG. Tel: 0171 531 0900. Tel: 0171 531 0900

No one knows Italy better

For your free copy of our 1996 brochure please call 01235 824354

The Wedding Services

29 South Molton Street, London W1V 6LW. Tel: 0171 669 9145

SUZELLE CAKES LIMITED

Colindale, Greater London. Tel: 0181 574 8997

Care of Character

For something special. Tel: 01484 782013

SHORTCUT

"The only route to take for the wedding of your dreams" PARTY ORGANISERS AND PURVEYORS OF FINE FOODS. TELEPHONE: 0171 352 4448

C & L COUNTRY CLUB

Hall incorporates Disco Style Lights, all inclusive price features colour co-ordinated decor and flowers. Tel: 0181 845 5662

NEIL DUTTON PARTY ORGANISING

Professional travelling Discotheques. High-quality lighting. Marquee hire and build. Party Organisation. Tel: 0171 738 0300

Rocailles

Bridal Jewellery for the Discerning Bride. Tel: 01453 543363

Jenny Tyler

AT LIBERTY BRIDAL ROOM. Tel: 01932 724395

THE MARQUEE GARDEN

For your wedding reception. Tel: 01773 80223

OUR NEW FRENCH FAIRY CATALOGUE

For your wedding reception. Tel: 0161 881 6852

CABOCHON

UK AND ACROSS EUROPE. Tel: 0171 731 8888

Imaginative & Professional Party Organisers

Marquees, Catering, Flowers, Design, Entertainment. Tel: 0171 386 0066

THE GROSVENOR STATIONERY COMPANY

I like to do things properly. Tel: 0171 730 2379

YORK STREET COUTURE HOUSE

Bridal. Ready-To-Wear. Tel: 0171 724 3464

Lynne Broberg

Chic and elegant. Tel: 01773 80223

THE MARQUEE GARDEN

For your wedding reception. Tel: 01773 80223

OUR NEW FRENCH FAIRY CATALOGUE

For your wedding reception. Tel: 0161 881 6852

LA STRECH LIMOS

Specialist in Stretch Limousine hire. Tel: 0181 423 9988

ASHLEY CARRIAGES

CHAUFFEUR LIMOUSINES. Tel: 0171 561 9840

AMERICAN STRETCH LIMOUSINES

ROLLS, MERCEDES, DAIMLER & EXECUTIVE CARS. Tel: 0171 561 9850

CHAMPAGNE Fournier St.

YOUR WEDDING CHAMPAGNE. Tel: 0171 571 5363

ELITE VACATIONS

For your wedding reception. Tel: 01773 80223

CAKES BY R. MOUNT

For your wedding reception. Tel: 01773 80223

DESI FONTAINE STUDIOS photography

From the very formal to the most informal and unusual wedding. Tel: 0181 878 4348

THE GARDEN PARTY

Stylized for weddings and special events. Tel: 01635 248639

CELESTIAL SOUNDS

LIVE MUSIC FOR ALL OCCASIONS. Tel: 01903 812662

THE WEDDING SHOP

Started 3rd Feb. Tel: 0171 838 0171

BUTLER & WILSON JEWELLERY BRIDAL COLLECTION

STAND 533 NATIONAL WEDDING SHOW. Tel: 0171 730 1234

BOROVICK FABRICS LTD.

The most fabulous selection of fabrics for the Bride and her Bridesmaids. Tel: 0171 437 0520

Romance... Champagne... Weddings

at Esseborne Manor. Tel: 01264 736444

The National WEDDING Show

OLYMPIA - LONDON. Tel: 0171 437 0520

MARRYING A CATHOLIC? HOW COULD YOU?

It's quite easy really despite some of the tales you hear. Tel: 0181 672 9333

INSURE YOUR Wedding

With the GA Wedding Plan. Tel: 01425 470360

MEDICAL MANOR

Licensed for Civil Marriage Ceremonies. Tel: 01647 24042

Temp Up To £1,000

ADMINISTRATIVE SECRETARY

Judy Farquharson PR SECRETARY

£30,000 Package + Ex. Benefits

£17,500 + Benefits

JEWELLERY

Electrum Gallery 21 South Molton Street London W1V 1DD Tel: 0171 629 6325

TO ADVERTISE
CALL: 0171 481 9994

LA CRÈME DE LA CRÈME

FAX:
0171 481 9313

SIX MONTH SEC

To £20K plus bens

Versatile & organised Sec required for busy team. Must be able to turn your hand to anything from co-ordinating and organising high profile meetings, to setting up spreadsheets, to looking after the dept. 100/60, Ampro, Lotus essential. Immediate start & City experience preferred.

CITY 0171 377 6777 FAX 0171 377 5079
MIDDLETON JEFFERS
RECRUITMENT LIMITED

NEW JOB  NEW NEWSPAPER

£20,000

Get in at the very beginning working at the "dawn" of a new newspaper. This is a unique opportunity to be part of a new venture. The new newspaper will be a daily paper, published every day except on Sundays and public holidays. It will be a new venture, a new challenge, a new opportunity. This will be an exciting and rewarding job. The new newspaper will be a daily paper, published every day except on Sundays and public holidays. It will be a new venture, a new challenge, a new opportunity. This will be an exciting and rewarding job.

CITY 0171 377 6777 FAX 0171 377 5079
MIDDLETON JEFFERS
RECRUITMENT LIMITED

SECRETARY/BOOKKEEPER

£18K

Friendly publishing company near London Bridge need an enthusiastic and numerate Sec. First class bookkeeping skills and experience essential. A varied and responsible role ideal for a candidate with a flexible approach to work. Sage system, MS Word & Excel.

CITY 0171 377 6777 FAX 0171 377 5079
MIDDLETON JEFFERS
RECRUITMENT LIMITED

SWISS COTTAGE

PERSONAL ASSISTANT to £20,000

A strong personality coupled with proven Admin skills will ensure you will be a success in this role. A demanding job for a 25-35 yr old who can supervise 3 others as well as managing 10 beds in the air! Good W/W, Excel and Powerpoint. Immediate start.

CITY 0171 377 6777 FAX 0171 377 5079
MIDDLETON JEFFERS
RECRUITMENT LIMITED

PUBLIC RELATIONS

Senior PA c21k

PR Consultancy with growing West End offices and exciting client base are looking for a senior PA to work as Director level. This position would appeal to someone with excellent interpersonal skills and the drive and enthusiasm to embrace a full PA role together with Personal and Office Management duties. Two years PA experience essential. Please call FORREST LINDHAM or LIA KELLY.

SECRETARIAL & TEMPORARY
RECRUITMENT
0171 379 8333
Fax: 0171 379 8113
7a Langley Street
London WC2E 7JA

MAY & STEPHENS

Dealing Floor Secretary, EC2 Bank

£18,500 + Full Bank Package

A genuine sense of involvement will be evident in this very busy role based on the dealing floor of a leading bank. As a Managing Director and his team of Traders, you will be the lynchpin of this group activities co-ordinating travel and diaries, ensuring liaison with their global network of clients, where a sense of humour and the ability to remain calm under stress is crucial. A Windows proficiency for the production of presentations is essential.

City Recruitment
Tel: 0171 488 9922 Fax: 0171 782 3931

EXECUTIVE PA

£20-25K + EXC BENS

This man is a real pleasure to work for as he gives you the opportunity to become more involved and use your talents to the full as you become his right hand person. The company is a major UK concern with an interesting industry. You will require shorthand, experience with Microsoft Office, good senior level presentation skills, a corporate environment and ideally be aged between 25-42 years. Call Marie-Therese Peckley on 0171 321 0988.

SOPHISTICATED MATURE PA

£20K + EXC BENS INC PENSION/BUPA

Rise to the challenge of working with a formidable but very charming boss. Something of a workaholic, he has a complicated schedule which you need to keep abreast of. As his "all singing, all dancing" PA, work to his exacting standards, especially in the presentation of correspondence on W/W. If you rise to the challenge and have the strength of character to work for an elusive boss, call Marie-Therese Peckley on 0171 321 0988.

DRAKE INTERNATIONAL

Knightsbridge/West End Tel: 0171-226-9838 Fax: 0171-226-9838

Hotspur/City Tel: 0171-321-0988 Fax: 0171-321-0988

Part time from 9.00am to 1.00pm

German speaking Secretary/PA

to MD required for a small, friendly international consultancy in NW London.

Competent in Apple WP, excellent telephone manners attention to details and discretion. Excellent salary paid on a weekly basis.

CV to Mr. R. Meinen, AC Europe Ltd, 5 Cavendish Avenue, London NW8 9JD

DO YOU HAVE 6 MONTHS EXPERIENCE? EARN UP TO £18,500...

INTERNAL P.R. - to £17,500 - Famous drink co is looking for PA/Sec to work in their busy Press Office. Outstanding opportunity - liaise at the highest level and organise major events. Suit 'A's/Grad. sh useful/60.

PEOPLE BUSINESS - to £18,500 - Fascinating co is looking for exceptional PA/Sec to work in their prestigious Client Services Dept. You should have excellent telephone manner/personal presentation and enjoy the challenge of ever-changing priorities. -/60.

0171-235 8427

KNIGHTSBRIDGE SECRETARIES E

Legal Secretary up to £19,500

City based firm of Solicitors are looking for a versatile secretary for whom job fulfillment is paramount. Your background in litigation and property will be put to good use and it is an opportunity for you to experience Corporate and Private Client work as well. Essential skills are 65 wpm copy/audio, English 'O' level or equivalent. Please call Sarah Dale on 0171 377 9919

LEGAL RECRUITMENT

Looking to Temp until 1997?

We have been selected to provide temporary secretaries for a leading international Management Consultancy. If you are a senior PA with good AppleMac skills and sound experience of a graphics package we can offer you long and short term assignments throughout the year in a fast-moving challenging environment. We provide full pre-assignment training and pay excellent hourly rates. Call Anna Ward or Clare Godfrey on 0171 434 4512

Crone Corkill

Temporary Recruitment

HOBSTONES

Temp Up To £10 Per Hour

The skiing season is threatening to avalanche and the temp market about to snowball. If you have 55 wpm typing and Windows experience we can offer you varied and challenging assignments. We are looking for the following candidates:

- Personal Assistants
- Senior Level Secretaries
- Group Secretaries
- Junior Secretaries
- Front Desk Receptionists

If you would like to work with a professional and friendly team, please call:

0171 437 6032 (West End) or 0171 377 9919 (City)

RECRUITMENT

CJES

Exciting career opportunity in this dynamic company

ADMINISTRATIVE SECRETARY

WEST END £17,000+ BONUS + BENEFITS

INTERNATIONAL FUND MANAGEMENT

Our client is a small and dynamic investment fund management company based in New Bond Street. Applications are invited from well-educated, smartly presented candidates, aged 26-35, with a minimum of 3 years' experience, ideally gained within a trading/financial services environment and with a positive and energetic approach to the business. The successful applicant will be responsible for the smooth operation of the office in the Director's absence and must have the maturity for considerable responsibility and high level client contact. The duties are broad ranging - secretarial, investment reporting to clients, front office management, etc. requiring a working knowledge of Word and Excel, organisational ability and effective business communication skills. Applications in strict confidence under reference AS5340/TT to the Managing Director, CJES.

Judy Farquharson Ltd.

PR/SECRETARY

for top international agency based in Central London to work with expanding marketing team. Must be confident team player for the challenging and rewarding role. Opportunity to become really involved with all aspects of account business including setting up photo shoots, collecting press packs, formulating presentation and generally holding the fort. 50+ wpm typing on W/W. £15,000.

47 New Bond St. London W1Y 9HA
TEL: 0171-493 8824 Fax: 0171-493 7161
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS

JFL

£30,000 Package + Ex. Benefits

Advance to Passing Go! Chairman's PA

Top International Corporation

INSTL, Paid O/T, NC Pension, Life, BUPA, Subsidised Restaurant, 21 Days Holiday

Receive your seat in the boardroom as PA to titled Chairman of leading UK based group. Only the best "fine chaps" experience will suffice for this rewarding role. Immediate start.

ROC House, 45 South Molton Street, London W1Y 1ED
Phone: 0171-499 5638 Fax: 0171-499 9002
ROC Recruitment

ROC

£16,000 Package + Ex. Benefits

Opportunity Knocks Secretary World Leader

INSTL, Paid O/T, Bonus, Mortgage Sub., Subsidised Restaurant, 25 Days Holiday

Once in a lifetime chance for college leaver to join this world renowned "Blue Chip" with a capital "P" corporation and be involved in all aspects of successful company. Magnificent office, excellent client base.

ROC House, 45 South Molton Street, London W1Y 1ED
Phone: 0171-499 5638 Fax: 0171-499 9002
ROC Recruitment

ROC

£17,500 + Benefits

Step Up The Career Ladder Polished PA

Prestigious Company

INSTL, Paid O/T, Mortgage Sub., NC Pension, Life, BUPA, 20 Days Holiday

Join the smart set and meet VIP's in delicious St James St. location. Excellent opportunity for a self-starter with superb administrative skills to assist with major client accounts in one of Britain's oldest firms. W/W, no discounts.

City Office, 45 London Wall, London EC2M 5TP
Phone: 0171 256 9040 Fax: 0171 256 9044
ROC Recruitment

PA to Director of Economic Consultancy

First class PA required to support a Director and his team in this busy consultancy. The ideal candidate will be a self-starter who is flexible and can work under pressure to meet tight deadlines. Responsibilities include diary management, report preparation and client liaison. Applicants should have excellent computer skills. Proficiency in Microsoft Word & Excel essential. A flair for design and knowledge of Powerpoint desirable. Salary £18,000.

Please send CV to Linda Styles, London Economics, 66 Chiltern Street, London W1M 1PR. No agencies.

HOBSTONES

HR Secretary to £21,000

Great opportunity to join the HR department of this major international group supporting the Director and his team. You'll have varied duties and will implement new systems to increase efficiency. 'A' level education, 4 years experience in a blue chip company and 65 wpm typing are a prerequisite. Please call Caroline Galan in the West End.

Office Manager to £19,000

Successful management consultants require a capable individual to assist them with all aspects of office administration. Getting value for money from suppliers, liaising with clients and controlling their accounts will be just some of your duties. An interest or aptitude for graphics and a European language useful. Age 25-35. 50 wpm and computer literate. Please call Isobel Dewar in the West End.

West End: 0171 437 6032
Victory House, 99-101 Regent Street, London W1R 7HB

RECRUITMENT

MATCHMAKERS !!

PARTNER'S SECRETARY

Top City Finance Company £18,500 + Excellent Benefits

Are you looking to join a market leader in the field of finance? Do prestigious offices, friendly colleagues, no huge hours and a misty role looking after two Partners (acting as mother hen to two Consultants), tempt you? If you are a team player who enjoys a degree of autonomy and have a minimum of 65wpm with a good working knowledge of Ampro - it could be time to move!

SHORTHAND SECRETARY

Victoria £16,000 + Excellent Benefits

This highly professional and friendly company requires an enthusiastic secretary aged 19-24. Shorthand at 80wpm and 50wpm typing is essential as is 6 months secretarial experience. If you are looking for involvement, good prospects and an impressive package - this is definitely for you.

PAN EUROPEAN RECRUITMENT

WA

c £18,000 + O/T + bens

USE YOUR LANGUAGES

This is your opportunity to work for this highly respected W/E based investment bank, who are looking to recruit motivated, professional and "switched on" Secretaries who have a knowledge of FRENCH, GERMAN or SPANISH. All positions involve working for a Director and a small team, co-ordinating projects and liaising with clients in your chosen language. The pace is fast and your days will be unpredictable with plenty of opportunity. Ideal candidates will have 60wpm typing, good W/W and around 3 years' secretarial experience.

0171 225 1888
VICTORIA WALL ASSOCIATES

P.A. TO EUROPEAN GENERAL MANAGER CHISWICK

£18,000 - £20,000 pa

Do you have the enthusiasm and experience to assist in the launch of the European arm of this established and successful specialist software company?

Your responsibilities will include setting up and maintaining office systems, handling incoming sales enquiries, marketing and co-ordinating purchase orders, and working efficiently in a fast paced environment often involving unusual hours. Initial induction calls one week in the US, and subsequent trips to Europe are likely. Good spoken French a distinct advantage.

For interview, call:

Pam Greenwood Personnel
The Swan Centre, Faversham Lane,
Chiswick W4 1JX
0181 595 1331

SECRETARY c £16K

Exciting opportunity within a dynamic media graphics environment for a well presented person. You will be enthusiastic, energetic and confident with excellent skills.

To fill this challenging position please write, enclosing cv, to Ms A. Henry, Rapida Group plc, 136-148 Tooty St, London SE1 2TU.

RAPIDA GROUP PLC

TEMPORARIES Win £1000 TEMPTED?

To take advantage of this wonderful, join our elite temporary team TODAY and work for the remaining 48 weeks of the year in the best companies in LONDON.

If you meet the following requirements:-

- Aged 20-30 years old
- A minimum of one year's secretarial experience
- Good shorthand and audio skills
- Well presented and well spoken
- Two or more of the following W/P packages - Word for Windows, Ampro, WordPerfect for Windows, Excel.

Don't delay - CALL US IMMEDIATELY

Please call us on 0171-734 8484
Fax: 0171 734 8501

WA

£18,000 + bens

INTERNATIONAL TEAM

One of our most prestigious, city based clients is looking for a young, dynamic secretary to work for a small, very cosmopolitan team. They travel a great deal and need you to be one step ahead, dealing with all their correspondence, liaising extensively at a senior level and holding the fort when necessary while they do deals around Europe. Confidence and energy are the key, as well as 60wpm typing and good W/W.

0171 225 1888
VICTORIA WALL ASSOCIATES

Equity Research £18,500 + O/T + Banking Bens

This prestigious W/E based financial institution, requires a confident, bright & proactive secretary to support 3 research analysts. You will use your exceptional IT skills to publish reports, create spreadsheets & generate graphics - in addition to recording expenses, organising travel & co-ordinating diaries. Would suit if you work well under pressure & have at least 3 yrs secretarial exp. 50+ wpm.

RECRUITMENT COMPANY
5 GARRICK STREET WC2E 9AN

HE WHO DARES WINS - £30,000 PKG

Our PRESTIGIOUS clients are offering attractive package designed to attract TOP CALIBRE secretaries with good skills including shorthand, excellent overseas travel, business and SHORTHAND PROSPECTS. City experience an advantage only. Positions include PERSONNEL, DEPT. PRIVATE CLIENTS, and CORPORATE FINANCE. Preferred exp. 15-25 yrs.

PHONE TODAY FOR AN IMMEDIATE INTERVIEW.
0171-374-2921 FAX: 0171-438-8822.

5 London Wall, London EC2M 5TP, City, EC2M 5TP.
(Recruitment Consultants)

ASSISTANT SECRETARY

The Engineering Council requires an Assistant Secretary for its busy Director General's office, to work for the Director General's Personal Assistant. The applicant will need fast, accurate word processing skills, shorthand, substantial experience of Microsoft Office including Word 6, Excel 5 and Powerpoint 4. Attention to detail, good administrative skills, filing systems, telephone and diary skills are essential as is a cheerful and willing personality.

Salary is c. £13,800 per annum + benefits

Please send your CV with accompanying letter to:

Christine Williams MIPD
Engineering Council
10 Malvern Street
LONDON WC2R 3ER

Closing date:
(Wed 14th February 96)
(No agencies)
Registered Charity Number 286142

WA

c £17,000

YOU CAN'T BEAT IT

You can't beat working for this internationally known soft drinks company. They have several positions available for bright, enthusiastic secretaries with excellent skills and experience. You will be required to be an active team player, have bags of initiative and be able to prioritise a hectic workload effectively. Situated in fabulous offices, you will be well rewarded with long holidays, medical cover, pension, paid travel, sub rest and gym! To hear more call Claire Hawker for Chairman and Finance Director of private financial services company located in Knightsbridge.

0171 225 1888
VICTORIA WALL ASSOCIATES

PERSONAL SECRETARY

An excellent opportunity is offered for an experienced, bright and personable secretary to assist the Chairman and Finance Director of a professional boutique financial services company. Computer skills necessary and ability to manage a wide variety of interesting responsibilities utilising common sense and initiative.

Salary negotiable upwards from £20k. Please send hand written c.v. to:
The Chairman - Box No 3475

MAY & STEPHENS

Dealing Floor Secretary, EC2 Bank

£18,500 + Full Bank Package

A genuine sense of involvement will be evident in this very busy role based on the dealing floor of a leading bank. As a Managing Director and his team of Traders, you will be the lynchpin of this group activities co-ordinating travel and diaries, ensuring liaison with their global network of clients, where a sense of humour and the ability to remain calm under stress is crucial. A Windows proficiency for the production of presentations is essential.

City Recruitment
Tel: 0171 488 9922 Fax: 0171 782 3931

Beryl Dixon reports on a yearly guideline for pay and benefits

You could also see where the jobs are opening up. Gordon Yates has asked employers to forecast their payroll numbers increase for some time now. Monitoring over the past few years has shown these to be

Headhunting At Its Best!
£19,000-£23,000

Join this prestigious International Executive Search Consultancy as secretary to a highly successful consultant. He needs an intelligent, hard-working person who can liaise at all levels with charm and diplomacy. This is a busy role for someone who enjoys typing, has fast audio/tp skills (shorthand useful) and who is socially poised. 'A' levels and a sound cv necessary. Age 24-36. - Please call Elizabeth Wood on 0171-434 4512

Crone Corkill
Recruitment Consultants

HISTORIC ROYAL PALACES

High energy assistant to help mastermind one of London's most historic urban developments

SECRETARY TO THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Over the next few years there are going to be some exciting (and historic) things happening at the Tower of London and its surrounds. Partners from the private, public and community sectors are cooperating to organise major economic, architectural and leisure developments which will see the area bloom as an attractive and thriving part of the capital. The Director of Public Affairs for the Historic Royal Palaces Agency, which manages this and a number of other historic buildings, is a key figure in planning, co-ordinating and promoting the entire programme - and assisting him is where you will come in.

Basically, your job will be as big as your energy and ability allow. For, in addition to handling the usual secretarial and office management responsibilities of a director's secretary, you will have every opportunity to get involved in planning and running the programme. This could mean carrying out research, organising events, coordinating projects or generally promoting aims and objectives to local communities, bankers, businesses, developers, agencies and the media. In fact, the scope is endless for the right person.

As you will have gathered, energy, imagination and initiative are essential qualities for this exciting challenge. We'll also be looking for a minimum of one year's office (or business) experience and fine tuned secretarial and administrative skills. It goes without saying, you should be a confident communicator and organiser, who can work with people from all walks of life and bring a high level of commitment to a demanding workload.

In return we can offer you a rewarding role and the opportunity to extend your skills and experience within exciting surroundings. The salary will start at up to £15,000 and there will be a number of generous employee benefits.

Interested? For more information, please telephone our 24 hour answer 'phone service on 0181 781 9770. Closing date: 16 February 1996.

Historic Royal Palaces is an equal opportunities employer

RECKITT & COLMAN

Reckitt & Colman is a worldwide manufacturer of household, pharmaceutical and food products with sales operations in over 120 countries. Its headquarters are located at Chiswick, West London where a superb opportunity now exists for an

IT Projects Administrator

This new role reports directly to the global IT Director, and will provide first class administrative support to this person and several multi-national project teams. Fluency in Spanish is essential. Important attributes include the ability to administer a large budget, an in-depth knowledge of graphics packages and excellent organisational skills. You will be a self-staring, creative team player with strong interpersonal skills, and above all, you will take delight in making a valued contribution to our business.

In return we will offer a competitive salary and benefits package, combined with real opportunities for self development in a truly opportunities in a friendly international environment.

In the first instance please call our retained consultants during the day on 0181-846 9500 (days) or 0956-877 321 (evenings)

RECEPTIONIST/SECRETARY
(to cover maternity leave)

Decca Company, in W2 requires receptionist/secretary to cover maternity leave from early March. Applicant must have excellent telephone manner essential. Hours 9.30am to 5.30pm, 23 hrs/week. Pay according to age and experience.

Please send cv for CV to Phillips Hartin
Smith & Niles-Morgan
Barnham Industries
c/o Junction Views
London W2
Fax: 0181 706 1313

ASSISTANT MANAGER/ADMINISTRATOR

Excellent business experience for 'bright' first-jobber offered by small, friendly Sightseeing Company.

Applicants must have excellent telephone manner, masses of initiative and self-motivation - be highly organised and educated to A-level standard.

Duties involve all aspects of running a small business. Send CV to: Maggie Rogers, Guidelines to Britain Ltd, 89 Alletts Park, Lendon SE21 8AA

SCOPE UNLIMITED (W3) $18,000 (+PKG)
MOVE OUT of a PA role & become the "right hand" of the young dynamic ED at the heart of an Int'l company. A potential EXECUTIVE, you are a "high flyer" with Excel & minute taking ability.
CITY CHALLENGE $19,500 + Bonus
 Working for a "move & shaker" in a high profile new department this position offers the excitement of the BANKING world coupled with a genuinely fun & friendly atmosphere. Experience of producing presentations ess.
 Please call Lisa or Rachel on 0171 636 1493

BEAVERS

Personal Recruitment Consultants

The Caravel
Consultancy
Co.

H.R. Secretary
c.£18,000+ Exc Bens

This is a key role within a dynamic, international H.R.
 department which supports this leading firm of Management Consultants. You should have excellent secretarial and computerised skills, equal to the highest level, and enjoy using initiative in a proactive, team environment.

Tel: 0171 734 7277.

Regentia Building, 1/5 Hills Place, Off Oxford Street.

TO ADVERTISE
CALL: 0171 481 9994

LA CRÈME DE LA CRÈME

FAX:
0171 481 9313

MAINE-TUCKER
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS
USE YOUR LANGUAGES
AND SHORTHAND IN ST ALBANS
UP TO £23,000 + MED + PENS

Excellent conversational French or German and shorthand (50+) is a must to join this expanding blue-chip company. This is a fantastic opportunity for you to be involved in a major PA role of Secretarial. This is a fantastic opportunity if you are within commuting distance of St Albans.

21 Jeremia Street, St James's, London SW1X 6HP
Telephone: 0171 734 7341 Fax: 0171 734 7340

MAINE-TUCKER
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS
UXBRIDGE
A LEGAL CAREER?
£12,000 + BENEFITS

You've got a typing and shorthand skill, good work experience, and a legal background. You're looking for a career in the legal sector. We have a fantastic opportunity for you to join a leading law firm in the City of London. This is a fantastic opportunity if you are within commuting distance of the City.

21 Jeremia Street, St James's, London SW1X 6HP
Telephone: 0171 734 7341 Fax: 0171 734 7340

MAINE-TUCKER
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS
BEAT THE WORKING
BLUES!
UP TO £19,500 + BONUS + MED + STL + GYM FACILITIES

A City company is one of the second biggest of their kind in the world. They are looking for a PA/Secretary to join their team. This is a fantastic opportunity for you to join a leading company in the City of London. This is a fantastic opportunity if you are within commuting distance of the City.

21 Jeremia Street, St James's, London SW1X 6HP
Telephone: 0171 734 7341 Fax: 0171 734 7340

MAINE-TUCKER
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS
AFTER YOUR DEGREE
A FUTURE!
£13,600 + PENS + 5 WKS HOLS + STL + SUB REST + GYM + MED

A leading company in the City of London is looking for a PA/Secretary to join their team. This is a fantastic opportunity for you to join a leading company in the City of London. This is a fantastic opportunity if you are within commuting distance of the City.

21 Jeremia Street, St James's, London SW1X 6HP
Telephone: 0171 734 7341 Fax: 0171 734 7340

MAINE-TUCKER
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS
PROFESSIONAL PAS
WANTED!
£20-21,000 + LVS + STL + MED + PENS + PD O/T

A leading company in the City of London is looking for a PA/Secretary to join their team. This is a fantastic opportunity for you to join a leading company in the City of London. This is a fantastic opportunity if you are within commuting distance of the City.

21 Jeremia Street, St James's, London SW1X 6HP
Telephone: 0171 734 7341 Fax: 0171 734 7340

MAINE-TUCKER
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS
30 TO 45 AND FULL
OF BEANS?
£19,500 + MED + 5 WKS HOLS + PENS + BONUS

A leading company in the City of London is looking for a PA/Secretary to join their team. This is a fantastic opportunity for you to join a leading company in the City of London. This is a fantastic opportunity if you are within commuting distance of the City.

21 Jeremia Street, St James's, London SW1X 6HP
Telephone: 0171 734 7341 Fax: 0171 734 7340

PERSONNEL
ADMINISTRATOR
c. £17,000/18,000 per annum (aac)

We are a firm of chartered surveyors based in Mayfair looking for an assistant to our Personnel Manager in a busy and pressured office environment. Duties will include all personnel administration for approximately 250 staff, including some secretarial work.

You will have excellent secretarial, administrative, and interpersonal skills, together with some previous experience of exposure to a personnel environment. A basic knowledge of employment law and payroll would be useful. Computer literacy (Windows) is essential, preferably Word, Excel and database packages.

If you wish to apply for this position, please send your CV in the strictest confidence with a covering letter to:

Fay Johnston MIPD, Personnel Manager,
Nelson Bakewell, 17c Curzon Street,
London W1Y 8LT.

(No Agencies)

HERBAL HEALTH
£15,000 - £18,000
US Corp. Dealing with new concept with nutrition within the sporting arena and other areas require office manager/PA to play major part in this small, young team. W4W, Excel, basic accounts & 50wpm. Age: 20's.
Norma Stamp Rec: 0171 222 5081.

GRAPHICS IN COMMUNICATIONS
£18,000 TO £19,000
Begin by assisting the International Sales Team with pitches & presentations. Progress rapidly, your words recognized & rewarded by the U.S. giant. W4W. Powerpoint 80wpm typing. Essential.
Call Norma Stamp Rec: 0171 222 5081

THINK HEALTHY
£18,000
U.S. Health Inc. need you to assist their busy Sales Team. Be the Co-ordinator for customers & suppliers. Use your initiative & quick wit to think on your own feet, managing orders & processing mail letters. Age 25-35. W4W. 50wpm + W4W.
Call Norma Stamp Rec: 0171 222 5081

AN ACHIEVERS DREAM!
£15,000
Go on photo shoots, sit in on policy meetings, format presentations & give 100% with the pace team to perfect the P.R. image of their particularly famous clients. Skills: W4W 60wpm.
Call Norma Stamp Rec: 0171 222 5081

VENTURE CAPITAL
PA/SECRETARY
In order to start a venture capital partnership. Some of the most exciting, fast growing, and most successful knowledge and a good salary.
Salary: £18,000 - 20,000
Please send CV and a covering letter to:
MBO Advisory Partners
12 Upper Grosvenor Street,
London W1X 9PA

PARKS BUREAU
PA SEC
INT CO. W1
This is a truly fantastic opportunity for you to join a leading company in the City of London. This is a fantastic opportunity if you are within commuting distance of the City.

Administrator
to £18,000
Our client provides a private, confidential counselling service to UK companies and their employees. As Administrator you will co-ordinate a network of trained counsellors, handle enquiries and maintain records. Strong admin skills, database experience, telephone knowledge and a solid work record in e.g. personal or caring requested.

Interior Design
£10,000
Fulltime gallery specialising in antiques and prints seeks a skilled, organised admin assistant with an unerring instinct for detail! The role also includes PA support to proprietor/administrator and requires fast, accurate shorthand and typing (100/70wpm).

HR/Recruitment
c. £15,000
Fast expanding management consultancy seeks a dynamic admin/co-ordinator to provide freelance support to a team of three consultants. Lots of liaison, diaries, back-up dealing with high level CVs, management job specifications etc. Accurate keyboard skills (60wpm) essential.
Contact: Your experts on the basis of merit and equal opportunity.

UP, UP & AWAY!
c. £30,000 + Car
Have you exhausted all opportunities to become fully involved in your current role? If you crave responsibility, thrive under pressure and are looking for more than a PA/Secretarial role, read on! Working 1:1 in a team oriented environment you will enjoy your own projects as well as working as a real assistant to this very busy executive. The role is City based and requires dedication and long hours. Skills 90/60. Age 25-40.
Please telephone 0171 628 9529 for further details.

Elizabeth Hunt
RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS

We are recruiting on behalf of the World's No.1 Brand
You are professional, proactive, flexible & enjoy providing full secretarial support to a busy team. Confident & outgoing with excellent secretarial & interpersonal skills, you should also be a highly capable administrator. Proficiency with presentation packages essential.
Generous salary and benefits.

THE RECRUITMENT
COMPANY
5 GARRICK STREET WC2E 9AR
0171-831-1220

We presently have a very large number of quality roles available. If you have secretarial skills and would like to re-assess your career options, call today in confidence, on 0171-494 4465 or fax us on 0171-494 4469.
GORDON-YATES
Recruitment Consultants

Adventure
MEDIA RECRUITMENT FOR LONDON
Creative Secretary £17,000
Secretary to work for the Creative Director plus 5 years. Proven ability to write copy, in Creative Dept. of an advertising agency or similar. Windows and Powerpoint skills. Personality. Age 25-35.
£17,000
5/Hand PA/Sec
Windows, Corel and Photoshop are a must for this M.D. Dealing with the press and at senior level so would suit mature secretary.
Account Group Sec £15,000
Secretary with excellent typing, Windows and Powerpoint for the Sales and Advertising agency. Secretarial in three 20s, highly motivated and enthusiastic. Willing to work for an A/C handling role and on their busy team. Windows & Powerpoint skills.
Young Sec + Reception c.£14,000
W1 Advertising agency requires young sec. (20s) to work for an A/C handling role and on their busy team. Windows & Powerpoint skills.
Tel: 0171 499 8992

SECRETARIAL (SPANISH) SECRETARY
£18,000
Working in the International Meetings Section of the leading of company will be one long adventure! Your secretarial skills must be first rate including shorthand for taking urgent orders. English will be your first language but you'll be based in Spain, & probably get by in other European languages too! Life is never boring here where a sense of humour & a calm approach can get you through even the most hectic of days!

EMPLOYMENT LAW SECRETARY
£18,000
Good legal experience essential for this challenging role but if you've got employment law experience you'll have a definite advantage. You'll need to be a secure typing of at least 40wpm but you should also be keen to learn & take on further responsibility. This is an excellent, challenging role in a large firm of solicitors offering superb benefits such as a company pension & a subsidised gym.
Call Andrew or Andrew on 0171 420 2531.
115 High Holborn, London WC1

Office Angels

BMC SOFTWARE
Camden, Surrey
PA TO MANAGING DIRECTOR
Circa £28,000
SALES
SECRETARIES
£ Excellent

BMC Software, the world's 12th largest independent software vendor with worldwide revenues for 1995 exceeding $345M is looking to recruit a top calibre PA to the Managing Director, to join its highly successful team.

The successful applicant will be able to demonstrate exceptional organisational and communication skills; be used to dealing with customers; have the experience and qualifications to perform within an international organisation, and be capable of running the office in the MD's absence.

To benefit fully from this position you will need a confident personality, sense of humour, flexibility and commitment, and be looking for involvement in the team's success.

In addition we are seeking Secretaries for two of our sales teams with experience in the IT/High Tech industry.

Working in a team orientated environment you will need an energetic and outgoing personality, to provide willing and proactive support to the sales force. Additionally you will be numerate, accurate, well organised and possess excellent Word Processing, Spreadsheet and Powerpoint skills.

These positions represent opportunities to join a company with one of the highest consistent growth records in the industry today.

To share in our future success, send your CV and additional information to the address below where it will be treated in the strictest confidence.

Frances Bailey
BMC Software Ltd
Compass House
207-215 London Road
Camden
Surrey GU15 3EY
Tel: 01276 24622

HOLLAND ASSOCIATES
CAREER CONSULTANTS
CITY INVESTMENTS
SEC/PA c£20 + BONUS + PERKS
You will need excellent presentation and communications skills and sound W/P/PC exposure (ideally Powerpoint and W4W). Personality and a sense of humour are equally important for this varied and challenging role.
PLEASE CALL FOR MORE INFO (8.30am - 8pm)
0171 288 1723
Mary Holland Associates, Career Consultants, Plasterers' Court, 1 London Wall, London, EC2Y 5EA

Business Administration/
Office Support
We're making an impact in a competitive world. Will you?
To £15,000 + benefits - Chertsey, Surrey

Highly successful and continually growing, DRA has responded impressively to the challenges and demands of today's increasingly competitive climate. With visionary scientific teams working at the forefront of knowledge, ours is a fast-moving, quality-driven, business-oriented culture.

For any ambitious organisation, effective administration is absolutely vital, and our Land Systems Sector is no exception. Here, the Director relies on the support of a hard-working team which, collectively, controls all the non-scientific, day-to-day issues of business and office management typical of a large business.

Within this team, we're now seeking three graduate calibre executive assistants. Working closely with the Office Manager and others in the team, you will take on a wide range of administrative and organisational roles which will often involve dealing with external customers and suppliers.

To qualify, you must have strong interpersonal skills, meticulous attention to detail and a commitment to delivering a high quality service. Familiar with PC systems and applications, in particular Microsoft Office, and having the initiative to analyse and solve problems, you should have a proactive attitude and a genuine desire to make a real impact. Whilst some office admin experience would be an advantage, it is your personal qualities and potential which will be decisive.

As well as extensive training opportunities and excellent career prospects, DRA rewards ability with an attractive package including non-contributory pension and generous holidays.

DRA welcomes applications from suitably qualified people regardless of sex, marital status, race or disability.

For an application form please contact, quoting reference LS25, The Response Handling Service, Associates in Advertising, 5 St John's Lane, London EC1M 4BH. Tel: 0171 251 5225 (during office hours). Closing date for receipt of completed applications 1st March 1996.

DRA
DRA is a division of DERA an Agency of the MOD

MANPOWER
There's more for you
Excellent Pay
Holiday Pay
Full Benefits Package

Our client, a leading international computer company, is seeking an experienced top-level PA. Working for a Senior Executive, you will have had several years' experience at this level, with the confidence and ability to handle multiple tasks calmly and professionally. A background in Financial Services or Banking would also be an asset.

We are offering an excellent salary and benefits, plus full training and on-going support.

If you are proactive, dynamic and looking for a new challenge, please contact Joyce Lee on 0171 202 5414. Fax 0171 202 5904.

OUTSTANDING
BANKING OPPORTUNITIES
£25K Package

Our client leads the market in the provision of expert specialist advice in the areas of Corporate Finance and Mergers and Acquisitions. We are looking for exceptional individuals to join the dynamic and successful team to provide, amongst other things, presentation work of the highest standard, as demanded by their high profile clients. West End based, in beautiful office surroundings, the combination of your senior level experience within Corporate Finance and your commitment, energy and enthusiasm will be rewarded with outstanding opportunities for financial reward. Short hand desirable, excellent typing essential. Please call to now on

0171-814 0800
Angela Mortimer is an equal opportunities employer.

Angela Mortimer

Office Manager
£19,500
It is essential that you have previous experience in a similar role. Responsibilities cover recruitment, health & safety, canteen, BUPA, personnel facilities, management, staff supervision & training. An additional part of the role is to act as PA to the M.D. which involves 50% of your time.
Call 0171 493 2888

THE ART WORLD
£16,000
A fantastic opportunity has arisen for a professional Secretary with lots of experience in the art world. You will be responsible for the smooth running of the gallery, liaising with the artist, and handling all correspondence. You will also be responsible for the gallery's finances, including invoicing, and for the gallery's security. This is a full-time position, with an excellent salary and benefits package. If you are interested, please send your CV to: Contact: Jane McGilley Tel: 0171 628 4245 Fax: 0171 491 2871 Ritz Recruitment

Part time from 1.00 pm to 5.00 pm
German speaking Secretary/PA
to MD required for a small, friendly international consultancy in NW London. Competent Apple WP, excellent telephone manners attention to details and discretion. Excellent salary paid on a weekly basis.
CV to Mr. R. Meinen, AC Europe Ltd, 5 Cavendish Avenue London NW8 9JD

P/T Personnel Administrator/Secretary
Maternity Leave Cover (possibly long-term)
To support executives covering CA (500000) and personnel functions for manager on maternity leave. Personnel and other general admin, own typing (W4W), liaison with other sites, using initiative. Nice office (non-smoking), friendly environment. Around 10-15 hrs p.w. between 9.30 am to 5.00 pm. Salary acc. Send CV and daytime number to: Mrs Hester, Petachem UK Ltd, Brown Court, 56 High Street Winkfield Village London SW19 5EE

ALL BOX NUMBER REFUSAL SHOULD BE ADDRESSED TO:
BOX No: —
c/o TIMES NEWSPAPERS
P.O. BOX 3553,
VIRGINIA ST,
LONDON, E1 9GA

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY
c£19,000
Exciting opportunity for a confident, intelligent Executive Secretary to assist two Regional Directors of the World's leading Wine & Spirits marketing company. Excellent secretarial skills, Windows & Freelance Graphics expertise, a positive customer focused attitude & external customers are all essential qualities for this interesting and varied role.
Call HAZEL BRANDON, 0171-493 1528

PA/SECRETARY
£25-30K + Overtime + Benefits
An internationally renowned Entrepreneur based in the West End with an innovative approach to Property Development, has an exciting opportunity to offer to a bright, highly competent, experienced and unflinching PA/Secretary who will participate in the day to day running of a busy office. The successful applicant will have held a high level position as PA/Secretary to a Chairman and will have experience in Property Development and/or Legal. Moreover you must have the initiative, common sense and motivation to work for this prestigious business person. Advanced Word Processing ability required. Skills: 80 wpm typing and WP 6.0b and W4W. Please call us on

0171-814 0800
Angela Mortimer is an equal opportunities employer. All applicants are positively welcomed.

Angela Mortimer

Lively & Intelligent Secretaries
sought by expanding firm of solicitors in Swiss Cottage. We have opportunities in various fields including commercial, conveyancing and litigation work. Legal experience not essential. Familiarity with WordPerfect (DOS/Windows) preferred. Please send CV to Geoffrey Ditz, Roper Zuckler, 5 Broadhurst Gardens London NW8 5QX

CRÈME DE LA CRÈME

APPOINTMENTS Bi-LANGUAGE

PROFESSIONAL INTERNATIONAL
'TEMPS'

£ Excellent Rates + Superb Working Conditions

We have recently been awarded several contracts with prestigious, multi-national organisations.

You will have excellent secretarial skills (min. requirement 50 wpm plus in-depth knowledge of Word For Windows, Excel and preferably PowerPoint or other graphics related packages). A second European language is a distinct advantage and many of these assignments would particularly suit the age range 20-35.

Our clients hold 'temps' in high regard and are looking for candidates of equally high calibre via a vis skills, experience, personality and attitude.

The assignments are often an introduction either to a career as a professional 'temp' or, in many cases, a permanent job.

PROFESSIONAL CANDIDATES DESERVE A PROFESSIONAL SERVICE

Please contact James Murray, Charles Russell or Edward Wilkinson for further details.
3 PRINCES STREET, LONDON W1R 7RA
Tel: 0171 734 3300 / 335 1975
Fax: 0171 499 0548

BUSY CITY PR FIRM: JOB SHARE
RECEPTIONIST/
SECRETARY

City PR firm need a Receptionist/Secretary following an internal promotion. Background in similar industry or financial markets useful; languages a bonus. Word for Windows experience essential. Good telephone manner, initiative, smart presentation, organisational skills. Hours shared between two applicants: 8.00am - 6.30pm.

Age 25 +
Salary: Negotiable.

Covering letter and CV to:

Miss Alex Hartley,
Binn & Co,
99 Gresham Street
London, EC2V 7NA

SECRETARY:
CORPORATE FINANCE
CITY BASED
- PACKAGE TO £25K+

Young and successful Fund management team seeks first class secretary to assist on transactions.

Minimum requirements:
80 wpm accurate typing
Microsoft Word 6.0
Powerpoint experience
Numeracy, initiative
Overtime and share of reception duties

Replies to: Max Lever, CWB Capital Partners
75 King William Street, London EC4N 7TA
(No Agencies)

Secretary / P.A.

Small but expanding unit trust management company requires person to work a WP, answer the telephone and generally help make a very large unit trust management company. Age unimportant but enthusiasm and adaptability vital.

Salary around £16,000.

Apply to Tim Miller, Managing Director,
Portfolio Fund Management Limited,
64 London Wall, London EC2M 5TP

PORTFOLIO

LEARN NEW SKILLS AND REFRESH OLD ONES

Short flexible courses in keyboarding and business shorthand.

Software training at introductory and advanced level in MS Word 6.0 for Windows, WordPerfect 6.0 for Windows, Lotus SmartSuite 4.0 for Windows.

4 Wetherby Gardens, London SW5 0JN
Tel: 0171 244 5700

QUALITY AND DISTINCTION IN BUSINESS PRACTICE
A Member of The Corporate Services Group plc

THE TIMES

1996 SURVEY OF LONDON
SECRETARIAL SALARIES

The eighth annual survey of secretarial salaries and employment conditions, compiled by Gordon Yates in conjunction with The Times, is now available.

Based on questionnaires completed by 475 companies employing over 125,000 staff, this year's survey offers detailed insight into the changes, trends and developments affecting secretarial and administrative salaries, benefits and employment in London and the UK.

The survey report runs to twenty pages of analysis, information and reports prepared in a readable, accessible style. It includes whole survey pay averages along with pay levels and employment prospects within sixteen different categories of business type.

This publication is freely available to anyone with responsibility for recruitment or employment of secretarial and administrative staff. To reserve a complimentary copy please forward your business card, or name and title on company letterhead, to Louise Brace at The Times, Advertisement Department, 1 Virginia Street, London E1 9BL.

GORDON YATES

Professional Secretarial Recruitment

DESIGN
£15000 S.W.6

The MD of a small, vibrant corporate design consultancy needs 1st class back-up from a young, well-organised secretary who's looking for real job satisfaction. Apart from handling all aspects of the business and running the office, you'll be supporting their immediate move to the West End. 50wpm W/W essential.

GERMAN MEDIA SALES to £18000 S.W.5

The advertising manager of a go-ahead media sales company with German clients needs a talented assistant, preferably German mother-tongue. You'll have 1 or 2 years' experience in advertising, media sales or publishing, be confident, enterprising and have fluent written English. Computer literacy essential. Age mid 20's.

Please call 0171 373 7779

JIGSAW

RECRUITMENT

PERSONAL ASSISTANT to Operations Director

Salary £ Neg. Sure.com

Game is one of the UK's leading retailers of multimedia products. In addition to excellent secretarial skills (including shorthand) you will need initiative, drive and a desire to be part of a winning team. The workload is considerable, but varied and includes research and project work.

Interested? Send a CV with current salary details to: Paul Lloyd-Roach at Game, Argent House, Hook Rise South, Surbiton, Surrey KT6 7LD

GAME

Game is an equal opportunities employer

GO GLOBAL! PA/EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT

£18-20,000+ Annual Bonus West London

When it comes to being at the forefront of international communications and commerce, our client, a global satellite communications company, is at the forefront. They need a PA/Executive Assistant to support their sales and marketing efforts. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

The ideal candidate who is personable, organized and able to think ahead will find an exceptional package awaits.

Please send or fax your CV to the attention of Pauline Newman. No phone calls.

The Chelsea Partnership
1 Chelsea Manor Gardens, London SW3 3SP. Fax: 0171 376 6242

Reception/Secretary
£15,000-£16,500

We are currently recruiting experienced Receptionists on behalf of clients located in the City & West End. Their business is growing and they require a Receptionist/Secretary to handle incoming calls, answer the telephone, and manage the office. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 5 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

The ideal candidate who is personable, organized and able to think ahead will find an exceptional package awaits.

Please send or fax your CV to the attention of Pauline Newman. No phone calls.

The Chelsea Partnership
1 Chelsea Manor Gardens, London SW3 3SP. Fax: 0171 376 6242

Reception/Secretary
£15,000-£16,500

We are currently recruiting experienced Receptionists on behalf of clients located in the City & West End. Their business is growing and they require a Receptionist/Secretary to handle incoming calls, answer the telephone, and manage the office. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 5 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

The ideal candidate who is personable, organized and able to think ahead will find an exceptional package awaits.

Please send or fax your CV to the attention of Pauline Newman. No phone calls.

The Chelsea Partnership
1 Chelsea Manor Gardens, London SW3 3SP. Fax: 0171 376 6242

Reception/Secretary
£15,000-£16,500

We are currently recruiting experienced Receptionists on behalf of clients located in the City & West End. Their business is growing and they require a Receptionist/Secretary to handle incoming calls, answer the telephone, and manage the office. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 5 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

The ideal candidate who is personable, organized and able to think ahead will find an exceptional package awaits.

Please send or fax your CV to the attention of Pauline Newman. No phone calls.

The Chelsea Partnership
1 Chelsea Manor Gardens, London SW3 3SP. Fax: 0171 376 6242

Reception/Secretary
£15,000-£16,500

We are currently recruiting experienced Receptionists on behalf of clients located in the City & West End. Their business is growing and they require a Receptionist/Secretary to handle incoming calls, answer the telephone, and manage the office. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 5 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

The ideal candidate who is personable, organized and able to think ahead will find an exceptional package awaits.

Please send or fax your CV to the attention of Pauline Newman. No phone calls.

The Chelsea Partnership
1 Chelsea Manor Gardens, London SW3 3SP. Fax: 0171 376 6242

Reception/Secretary
£15,000-£16,500

We are currently recruiting experienced Receptionists on behalf of clients located in the City & West End. Their business is growing and they require a Receptionist/Secretary to handle incoming calls, answer the telephone, and manage the office. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 5 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

The ideal candidate who is personable, organized and able to think ahead will find an exceptional package awaits.

Please send or fax your CV to the attention of Pauline Newman. No phone calls.

The Chelsea Partnership
1 Chelsea Manor Gardens, London SW3 3SP. Fax: 0171 376 6242

Reception/Secretary
£15,000-£16,500

We are currently recruiting experienced Receptionists on behalf of clients located in the City & West End. Their business is growing and they require a Receptionist/Secretary to handle incoming calls, answer the telephone, and manage the office. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 5 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

The ideal candidate who is personable, organized and able to think ahead will find an exceptional package awaits.

Please send or fax your CV to the attention of Pauline Newman. No phone calls.

The Chelsea Partnership
1 Chelsea Manor Gardens, London SW3 3SP. Fax: 0171 376 6242

Reception/Secretary
£15,000-£16,500

We are currently recruiting experienced Receptionists on behalf of clients located in the City & West End. Their business is growing and they require a Receptionist/Secretary to handle incoming calls, answer the telephone, and manage the office. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 5 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

The ideal candidate who is personable, organized and able to think ahead will find an exceptional package awaits.

Please send or fax your CV to the attention of Pauline Newman. No phone calls.

The Chelsea Partnership
1 Chelsea Manor Gardens, London SW3 3SP. Fax: 0171 376 6242

Reception/Secretary
£15,000-£16,500

We are currently recruiting experienced Receptionists on behalf of clients located in the City & West End. Their business is growing and they require a Receptionist/Secretary to handle incoming calls, answer the telephone, and manage the office. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 5 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

MULTI-LINGUAL OPPORTUNITIES

BI-LINGUAL French secretarial for 1st class back-up from a young, well-organised secretary who's looking for real job satisfaction. Apart from handling all aspects of the business and running the office, you'll be supporting their immediate move to the West End. 50wpm W/W essential.

BRUSSELS, 1st class back-up from a young, well-organised secretary who's looking for real job satisfaction. Apart from handling all aspects of the business and running the office, you'll be supporting their immediate move to the West End. 50wpm W/W essential.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

JAPANESE speaking secretary/assistant needed for an international Co. based in London. Fluency in both English and Japanese. Computer literacy essential. The position involves a lot of travel and the candidate must be able to work independently and manage a busy schedule. The ideal candidate will have a minimum of 10 years experience in a similar role. Excellent typing and shorthand skills, with an ability to communicate clearly at all levels.

GERMAN/ENGLISH TRANSLATION. Some French. 3 months. 12.50 per hour. 425 9925.

POP

Liverpool adds a musical, Ferry 'Cross the Mersey, to its new industry: marketing the past

THEATRE 1

Athol Fugard proffers a deep and subtle message for the new South Africa in Valley Song

THE TIMES ARTS

THEATRE 2

A fine production of The Good Woman of Setzuan cannot disguise the faded nature of Brecht's rhetoric

TOMORROW

A Little Princess, and all the other new films, reviewed by Geoff Brown

A splendid time is guaranteed for all?

As a new musical gets set to bring back Liverpool's glory days as the home of Merseybeat, Alan Jackson visits a city keen to cash in on its fab heritage

That relatively new phenomenon, the heritage industry, encourages every corner of Britain to aspire to theme-park status. At times, the marketing style is so mannered and discreet it is almost painful. Witness Sissinghurst, where visitors scything their way through tasteful tea towels, pot pourri and superior jams may find themselves aching for the respite of souvenirs as unashamedly vulgar as a Vita Sackville-West fridge magnet or glove puppet. Elsewhere, the relationship between inspiration and self-exploitation is more bizarre: in Haworth, bodies weary from the climb up picturesque but steep and user-unfriendly cobbles may be revived by a Brontë-burger and chips, as well as the more traditional tea and scones.

'We're fools if we don't capitalise on our musical past'

It should come as no surprise, then, to those arriving in Liverpool as day-trippers — and 92 per cent of the city's annual £73-million tourism income comes from that Lennu and McCartneyesque category — that a big wide world of Beatles-related opportunities awaits them. Sitting at a window table in the Lucy in the Sky café, situated in a mini-mall which rose from the rubble of the original Cavern Club, I scan a list of neighbouring retail and leisure attractions. Some are merely pun-inspired assaults on the passing pound, dollar or yen — Soley For Men (shoes) or Top Knots (hairpieces, wigs and toupees) — but most claim some connection with the Fab Four. Around the corner at the Cavern Pub, the pun-hungry visitor can order a Sgt Pepper Steak Sandwich or portions of either Give Peas a Chance or John Lemon Meringue Pie. Those with an appetite for proper mementos are to be found in the Beatles Shop, where a comprehensive range of memorabilia is on offer, ranging from rare records, photographs and posters to fridge magnets and glove puppets (although not, alas, tea towels, pot pourri and upmarket jam).

Those purists horrified by the destruction of the Cavern — it has subsequently been replicated here, and recreated in its original state, at the Albert Dock — would choke on their Beatlesburger. "The importance of the group and, indeed, of the whole Mersey sound, cannot be overstated," where tourism is concerned," says Mike Wilkinson, Liverpool's head of tourism, arts and heritage. "When you ask foreign visitors what they knew about the city before they came here, it boils down to football teams and pop groups." Last week Paul McCartney was in town for the opening of the Liverpool Institute for the Performing Arts, and the level of excitement was phenomenal. It's my belief that we've previously undervalued — and underutilised — the impact that the Beatles in particular had. Wilkinson's post is less than three years old, underlining Liver-

Gerry Marsden, writer and singer of the hit, Ferry 'Cross the Mersey, and narrator of the eponymous musical about to open in Liverpool, takes a ferry across the Mersey pool's new commitment to marketing itself as a centre of tourism. Working in alliance with various other regional bodies in the public and private sectors, he has created a three-year strategy which includes the promotion of the Cavern Quarter Initiative, within which local business interests are considering the opening of a Beatles-themed hotel and the creation of a Beatles trail, featuring actual discs sunk into the pavements, a la Hollywood Boulevard.

Pop-related tourism has developed a lot already, but there's quite clearly scope for a great deal more," he says. "New Orleans has jazz. We have the Beatles. It's definitely an important way forward."

Meanwhile, in a shabby rehearsal studio, the cast members of Ferry 'Cross the Mersey — The Musical go through their paces for the impresario Bill Kenwright. "The best two hours I've spent since Everton beat the pool 2-1 three months ago," he says of the show, which tells the story of "a headstrong young Liverpudlian and his band storming their way to the top at the height of the Merseybeat boom."

The show has its premiere next week at the Liverpool Playhouse (of which Kenwright is executive producer), then sets off on a 14-venue regional and, possibly, pre-West End tour. "If you've got it, flaunt it," Kenwright says of the revenue potential of the Mersey pop legacy. "Just as Stoke capitalises on its potteries, so we must capitalise on our musical past. If we don't, we're fools. It's a key to our ability to thrive again."

Downstairs, in Lennon's Bar, the revue's narrator-star Gerry Marsden admits to being humbled by the enduring success of a song that took him just ten minutes to compose more than 30 years ago, yet which has not only permeated the wider consciousness as an emblem of Liverpool's civic pride, but is also piped to passengers as today's ferry service docks at the Pierhead. "I don't think the city ever really appreciated quite how big it was internationally," he says. "If it had, it would never have allowed anything so lunatic to happen as the demolition of its ultimate attraction, the original Cavern Club."

Now 53 and resident across the water in Wirral, Marsden claims that he and his Pacemakers never really appreciated the fact that they represented a footnote to musical history. "Until Brian Epstein came along to manage us and take everything forward, we thought only of playing for enjoyment and, hopefully, making a few quid along the way. Even when we had our first hit [How Do You Do It?] in 1963, we still thought we had no more than a five-year career. More than 30 years on, the same songs are still earning me a living. Amazing!"

And still earning him respect, too. The tourists queuing to take the daily Magical Mystery Tour of Beatles sites may comprise young, camcorder-wielding Japanese, but Lennon's Bar regulars still recognise a local hero when they see one.

A small group of twenty-something lads chatting about football are galvanised by Marsden's unexpected appearance. "Respect due, man," says one, entranced, before extracting the star's promise to hold still until a camera can be found. "Please, have this one on me," adds unemployed Jason, buying a drink for a man who found success before Jason was even born. And "make sure you put forward a positive image of Liverpool — not the usual rubbish that's written," cautions his pal Stephen, on discovering a journalist is present.

"You see, they've got a great spirit here," says Marsden proudly. If the marketing men could bottle and sell such a commodity, they probably would.

● Ferry 'Cross the Mersey — The Musical is at the Liverpool Playhouse (0151-709 8363) from Monday until March 9

THEATRE: Fugard's touching portrait of new South Africa and old South Africans... bored by a bizarre double bill... Brecht's style without substance

Witness for the plaintive

Valley Song
Royal Court

Somewhere in his diaries Athol Fugard remembers the moment in 1968 when it hit him that his life's work was "to witness as truthfully as I can the nameless and desperate of this little corner of the world".

He went on to do just that, giving the world his observations of the human impact of pass laws, the destruction of shanty towns, poverty, displacement, police sledge, "immorality", acts, imprisonment and much, much else. In his unassuming, unpretentious way he helped to destroy apartheid — and with it, you might suppose, he ended his career as the great South African witness.

But the play he has written at the age of 63 proves that this is not the case. There are troubled people in the new South Africa, too, and fresh fears in need of a truthful recorder. Change, even positive change, is frightening. That is the message of Valley Song and, since Fugard has not only directed it but plays two of its three characters, it is surely a pretty personal one, aimed partly at himself.

On the face of it, Valley Song is an embarrassingly simple piece, couched in language that can venture perilously close to the banal. The only close to the banal, Cape Coloured called Veronica, wants to leave the rural outback and hone her singing talent in Johannesburg. The play is resisted by her grandfather, who lost his daughter and her mother to the big city, and gently challenged by the Author, a white Fugard-clone seeking escape from the whirl of the South African theatre in the same valley. It is yet another variation on the tale of the child-in-search-of-a-future, but, as it turns out, more subtle and resonant than it seems. The Author wants to wait change, yet admits to a fierce nostalgia for the "unspoiled, innocent little world" that the valley once was. Fatalistic old Buks, as the grandfather is called, clearly feels secure with rigidities of caste that vex his spirit yet strike him as God-given. Both old men believe in roots and fear rootlessness. Yet the play paradoxically suggests that roots trap and destroy as well as give nourishment and a sense of belonging, and that rootlessness offers the freedom to range and start again as well as the danger of loneliness and loss.

Nor is this an abstract dilemma. It is a matter of burning concern to Esmeralda Bihl's, appealing Veronica, who angrily rejects both her grandfather's suggestion that she work as a skivvy for the Author and the Author's prophecy that she will end up collecting wood on some veld, barefoot and with a child on her back.

She is a confused, optimistic adolescent — and the spirit of Mandela's young South Africa. She prefers to dream, hope and run risks rather than do the economically sensible thing, which is clean all-white houses for a living, as her grandmother did before her. Just to add to the complexity, her ambition seems to be less to sing well than to make the sort of spool-American noises she thinks will bring her fame and wealth. Like South Africa itself, she has

An appealing double-act: Athol Fugard as Buks and Esmeralda Bihl as Veronica difficulties and disillusion ahead.

Does that sum up the play's conclusion? Probably not, given the many contradictions beneath its plain-looking surface. It has a ruminative, questioning feel, the more so because of Fugard's presence both as the sophisticated Author and, with a twist of the vowels and pull of the hat, the shrewd if illiterate Buks. He is not a hugely gifted actor, but there is something about his tiny, bony, earnest face that grabs the attention and leaves you in no doubt that matters of real moment are being aired. See it, see him.

BENEDICT NIGHTINGALE

THE Gate theatre's inaugural Biennale Festival kicks off so inauspiciously it is almost stunning. I certainly glazed over long before the blokes in the bear and moose suits started lurching about inside the toilet cubicles, supposedly having it away with two bored housewives. That was presumably the outré/absurd climax of Services, Elfriede Jelinek's crudely feminist play about suburban Austrians' sexual urges.

This season of brand new European plays sounds promising, pioneeringly working against British theatre's insularity. However, it opens with an experimental double bill which is, one hopes, the pits, Jelinek's housewives and their chauvinist husbands, pulling in at a motorway café which is actually a sex joint for frustrated women, talk in a laboured style. The dialogue shunts between the obvious and the obscure. Annie Siddons's cast, in Day-Glo

The bad and the ugly

Cat and Mouse (Sheep)/ Services
Gate, WI

Lyra, fail to awaken our interest by delivering their lines extra loud. The production suggests parallels with Costi fan tutte and Shakespeare's Merry Wives. But this brass modern effort is hardly on a par with its forebears.

Services is preceded by Cat and Mouse (Sheep), an anti-play and satire of post-

Idea whose time has gone

BRECHT'S notions of kindness and fellow feeling, inside or outside Setzuan, are at best peculiar, at worst nonsensical. Shen Te, the so-called good woman, gives food and tobacco to beggars, trusts thieves, and allows herself to be ruined because she never bothers to read the small print.

In fact, she is The Simple-Minded Woman of Setzuan, but Brecht does not call her own name. When one cousin is there the other is not. To adapt the words of the old song, you can't have one with the other. Man cannot be good and at the same time succeed in this heartless world.

The pity is that an idea which certainly contains more than an element of truth is

The Good Woman of Setzuan
Orange Tree

fleshed out with such thinly textured events, and placed in a story that guilefully calls things the wrong names. But this is how Brecht felt he could present the argument in order to awaken the spectator's capacity to act.

More interesting than the play's argument is the style of direction that Sam Walters employs to demonstrate it, developing his own Verfremdungseffekt from his author's famous "alienation effect".

So that we shall not identify Shen Te with any one actress, all five play her in turn, handing over a shawl at the moment of switch, unless she is acting Shui Ta, in which case she passes a wide-brimmed hat and cane. Some actresses play one or both better than the others. Teresa McElroy made an impossibly sweet-natured goodie but her stern, unbending Shui Ta was the best of the baddies.

The production is described as "promenade", but all this means is that the audience stands at the sides or sits on the floor. This is not greatly different from the ordinary arrangement, although more uncomfortable.

The company of nine creates neat thumbnail impressions of the water-seller, the wastrel, the barber, the baby and others, and there is humour in some of the lines, or in the playing of them. The play was stylistically innovative in its day, but that style has passed into theatrical language and leaves the simple content isolated and exposed.

JEREMY KINGSTON

RSC
ROYAL SHAKESPEARE COMPANY
ALLIED DOMECO

WORLD PREMIERE IN THE PIT
SLAUGHTER CITY by Naomi Wallace

A bizarrely memorable play... a sardonic cri de coeur
Breaching Standard

February 8, 9, 10, 12, 13
and continuing
Box Office
0171 638 8891

This production is presented in association with AT&T, OnStage

KATE BASSETT

CHOICE 1

Roger Norrington steers the London Philharmonic through Berlioz

VENUE: Tonight at the Festival Hall

CHOICE 2

Rambert hits the road with works by Christopher Bruce and others

VENUE: Theatre Royal, Brighton, all week

THE TIMES ARTS

YOUNG ARTS

Anything the Second Viennese School can do, inner London schoolkids can do better?

OPERA

Stockhausen is back, with a few musical ideas about the future of world government

Listening to Alban, not Damon

Schoolchildren are learning to write songs like Berg rather than Blur, writes Hilary Finch

Pupils at North Westminster Community School in London learn how to turn their poetry into songs — and get them played

The young autodidact... The basis that what was good enough for him was also likely to do the trick in north Westminster, the Wigmore Hall — which has increased young audiences for Lieders to an extent that German and Austrian houses still find hard to believe — introduced a songwriting project in four inner London secondary schools.

Each school received four visits over five weeks from a team of professionals. Berg's Seven Early Songs, with their challenging fusion of tonal, atonal and 12-tone writing, acted as focus and inspiration for new poems, new songs. Now the whole lot will be performed at the Wigmore Hall at the end of the project on Friday.

Schools don't come much grittier, or much more musical, than North Westminster Community School. Its 1,900 students are spread over three grim concrete sites. Twice a week, a group of 16 GCSE music students pass through a heavy security door protecting their precious keyboards, piano and computer.

At Hanson, head of music and jazz saxophonist, is ambitious for his charges. He has set up, single-handed and unpaid, Saturday Music School, attended by 70 per cent of his Year Ten pupils. He runs a string ensemble, a percussion ensemble, an improvisation class, and much more. Now he was trying out his latest masterclass: Howard Moody (pianist), Mark Withers (clarinet and animator), poet Jo Shapcott — and Berg. Shapcott first. Berg's song 'Im Zimmer' ('In the room') was the focus. So what was indoors? Home? School? A place to retire to, inside your own head? And how was it? What did it sound like, smell like? What did it say?

'Indoors smells like burnt toast. Indoors tastes like a charcoal roast. Indoors says I'm in hell. I reply, oh well.' That was Jerome Emanuel, for Laura Webb, 'the sound of indoors is loud'. But it smells suffocating. Indoors whispers stay I reply: we'll see. Rooms were cold out loud, accompanied by greater and lesser guffaws of embarrassment-heavy chewing of gum. A piano and a clarinet busked their way around two distinctive sound palettes of notes: one a gentle and comforting whisper of white notes, the other a more menacing mix of all-black. Moody and Withers played Berg's own 'Indoors'. Silence gripped the group. Rapping feet were stilled. 'It's the difference between painting a picture and taking a photo, isn't it?' Hanson said.

For their own picture, the students selected the set of notes they preferred. Then, having drawn a single line tracing the shape of their own declaimed words, the line was transferred into the black notes. Piano and clarinet transcribed the written line into sound. Mouths gaped at the magic of transformation. The following week, the song had to be fixed. Shapcott had distilled into a single lyric a potent recipe of images from each student. Every individual poem would be printed in a programme book: several would be read out loud. But only one composite work would be fine-tuned and performed. Editing began: more performance now, with real showmanship and not a little choreography. Shapes were found for words, notes for shapes, the tone-row selected. 'Sad, dark and lonely/Not very homely. Burnt toast, charcoal roast...' Hanson was thrilled with the new insights and options offered to his fledgling composers. 'Nearly all their own private listening experiences are lyric-based, but so often it's all bound up with social function and self-identification,' he said. 'This has shown them how song can be about self-expression too. And they vote with their feet — they've all turned up. I'm pleased, because they're pleased.'

Indoors will be performed at the Wigmore Hall, Wigmore Street, London W1 (0171-935 2141) on Friday (5.45pm). It will be followed by Berg's Seven Early Songs as part of the International Songmakers concert at 7.30pm.

Stockhausen rises and falls on a point of order

Best is the end. After an exultant pulsed section reminiscent of Messiaen's Cinq rechants, the president concludes the session, and the parliamentarians leave the stage — all but one, the tubist of the basses, who dithers to right and left and finally remains alone. He manages to stutter out a remark: 'Yes, and here would come the next scene.' Achim Jäckel was touching in this role: he and his colleagues in the choir of South German Radio, under their president-conductor Rupert Huber, were excellent all through.

PAUL GRIFFITHS

LONDON

CHAPTER TWO First night of previews for Tom Corn and Sharon Gless in one of Neil Simon's New York comedies. Corn plays a recently widowed author living near Central Park, inevitably whining towards Gless, a recently divorced actress living in less salubrious dwellings. Glasgow, Sharnbury Avenue, W1 (0171-494 5055). Tonight-Feb 17, 8pm; mats Thurs, 3pm, Sat, 5pm. Opens Feb 19, 7pm.

MORRINGTON'S BERLIOZ Whether conducting the London Philharmonic (the case tonight) or his own period instrumentals, the London Classical Players, Roger Norrington can be relied upon to find a strikingly fresh approach to 19th-century music. Tonight he conducts a selection of Berlioz's music, including the Royal March and Storm from The Trojans, the overture to Les Francs Juges and Le Carnaval Romain, and that sumptuous song-cycle Nuits de l'été. Murray is the soloist. Festival Hall, South Bank, SE1 (0171-550 4242). Tonight, 7.30pm.

THE CHANGING ROOM Opening night for David Storey's tabulating play about a rugby league team preparing for the weekly game. James Macdonald, centre, the third in the season of Royal Court Classics. Duke of York's, St Martin's Lane, WC2 (0171-555 5122). Tonight, 7pm. Then COMIC CUTS Backstage at the Leeds Empire in 1951, times are changing as old-style variety is menaced by new, young pop singers. Jack Shepherd's play catches the moment of change. Directed by Jonathan Church. Lyric Theatre, King Street, Manchester, M2 (0161-781 2311). Mon-Sat, 8pm; mat Sat, 4.30pm.

COMMUNICATING DOORS Angela Thorne reopens Ayckbourn's ingenious time-travel play, fleeing from a wonderful variety via the doors of a hotel that take her forward and back a couple of decades. Swanley Strand, WC2 (0171-336 8888). Mon-Sat, 7.30pm; mats Wed and Sat, 3pm.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA: (where everyone knows well) Preposterous American musical about love and the electric chair. Also as unrepentant as you can get. Aldwych, Strand, WC2 (0171-416 6048). Mon-Sat, 7.45pm; mats Wed and Sat, 3pm.

FUNNY MONEY Ray Cooney plays the man who finds a bag of money in his latest role, Rodney Bennett is the sorely needed lackey. Playhouse, Northumberland Avenue, WC2 (0171-439 4401). Mon-Sat, 8pm; mats Thurs, 3pm and Sat, 5pm.

AN IDEAL HUSBAND Turnabout room for Peter Hall's comedy about a child psychologist (Hamel Watts) in Stephen

TODAY'S CHOICE

A daily guide to arts and entertainment compiled by Kite Anderson

ELSEWHERE

BRIGHTON Christopher Bruce gives another of his leading dances a shot at the choreographer's 'Chair' with tonight's premiere of Didi Veldman's Chair (Voice of Collaboration), for the Rambert Dance Company. Veldman's piece is based on Bruce's own. Swanston and Mark Baldwin's cheerful Barbarian starts at a seven-week tour. Theatre Royal, New Road, (01273-328 488). Tonight-Sat, 7.30pm; mat Thurs, 2.30pm. Newport, Westbury, Dargate (01504 24811).

GLASGOW The busy American conductor Andrew Litton supervises an equally busy festival of American music and arts — I Like to Be in America — involving Scotland's two main orchestras, the Scottish Ensemble and Glasgow's Film Theatre and Royal Concert Hall Galleries. Litton conducts tonight's Scottish Chamber Orchestra, conductor of Copland, Ives and Barber.

THEATRE GUIDE

Jeremy Kingston's assessment of theatre showing in London

House full, returns only

Some seats available

Seats at all prices

Potter's play about the strains of life in today's London. Hampstead, Swiss Cottage Centre, NW3 (0171-722 3301). Now previewing. Starts opens tomorrow, 7pm.

TWELFTH NIGHT: Ian Judge's delightful production returns for a brief season, with Edward Petherbridge as Malvolio, Emily Joyce as Viola and Paul Greenwood as Feste. Barbican, Silk Street, EC2 (0171-338 8891). Tonight, 7.15pm.

WILD DATS Anton Lesser as Rover, the young actor whose talk is a pastiche of the roles he has played. Highly enjoyable revival of John O'Keefe's 1971 farce, with James Bolam. National (Lyttelton), South Bank, SE1 (0171-338 2223). Today, 2.15 and 7.30pm.

LONG RUNNERS

Buddy: Strand (0171-630 8800).

Cats: New London (0171-426 0072).

David Guttery: Apollo (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

Don't Dress for Dinner: Dukes (0171-494 5070).

ENTERTAINMENTS

ART GALLERIES

DUNCAN CAMPBELL 15, The Square, W. M. ROWLAND HILLER (1950-60). Watercolours & Drawings to 1 March. 0171 827 8555.

DANCE

SADLER'S WELLS 0171 715 6000. CORAZON FLAMENCO. 'Mesmerising, the best party in town'. Call 0171 715 6000.

OPERA & BALLET

LA BOHEME. TONIGHT UNTIL FEB 10TH. The Centenary Production. Fully staged in the Round with International cast. Royal Albert Hall, Feb 10-12th. Tickets £15.50 - £27.50. Box Office: 0171 589 8212.

OPERA & BALLET

COLISEUM 0171 632 8300 (9th). ENGLISH NATIONAL OPERA. TONIGHT 7.30 THE PEARL FISHERS. Tenor 7.30 THE MAGICAL FLUTE. Tenor 7.30 THE MAGICAL FLUTE.

THEATRES

LA BOHEME. TONIGHT UNTIL FEB 10TH. The Centenary Production. Fully staged in the Round with International cast. Royal Albert Hall, Feb 10-12th. Tickets £15.50 - £27.50. Box Office: 0171 589 8212.

THE LONG & THE SHORT

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

STARLIGHT EXPRESS

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

THE FIELDS OF AMBROSIA

ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046. ALDWICH 0171 604 6046.

MUSIC 1

Mark Elder talks about Wagner, ENO, and where a top-class opera conductor goes next

MUSIC 2

A new trombone concerto by Toru Takemitsu receives its first performance in Scotland

THE TIMES
ARTS

MUSIC 3

Mahler's songs are presented in unfamiliar guise in an enterprising Nash Ensemble series

OFFER

See Sharon Gless star in Neil Simon's Chapter Two at our special Theatre Club prices

MUSIC: Richard Morrison meets Mark Elder as the dynamic conductor returns to ENO. Plus, concert reviews

Still high on greasepaint

There are many superb opera conductors around. But it is hard to think of any who exude such a passion for the theatre — for all the graft, the guile, the greasepaint — as Mark Elder. His credo is simple to declare: "The greatest challenge for the opera conductor," he says, "is to strike a balance between theatrical and musical gesture."

But that is the challenge which has spurred Elder to his triumphs. Whatever the critics said about the more lurid English National Opera productions of the late 1980s, they agreed on one point: Elder's interpretations were electrifying. They surpassed most of what came from Covent Garden at that time, and little has happened at ENO since Elder's departure in 1993 bears comparison.

Now Elder is back, temporarily. At the Coliseum on Saturday he conducts a new David Alden production of Tristan and Isolde. Elder's experience of conducting Wagner is extensive: Dutchman, Lohengrin, Rheingold, Valhalla... and, as he rather bizarrely points out, "more performances of Meistersinger than any other living Englishman". But Tristan is new to him. "It isn't like any of the others. It has such a burning passion, first of all expressed as longing and pain, then exploding into that incandescent second act."

Back in 1970, fresh out of Cambridge and on the Royal Opera staff, the 23-year-old Elder — a prodigiously musical son of a Crouch End dentist — had an amazing introduction to Wagner. In one season he assisted on the Ring, Meistersinger, Parsifal with Goodall and Tristan with Solli, and then conducted an amateur performance of Flying Dutchman. It was the kind of crash course that money can't buy. "Yes," Elder agrees. "Crash and crush. I mean, I had a huge crush on Wagner. When you find this music for the first time it's overwhelming: a wall of feeling hitting you in a wall of sound. It seems more powerful than anything you have ever heard. I'm not saying that it doesn't now. But when you work on these pieces for years you learn where to turn on the heat, where to pull back, how to make the singers sound well. You realise that you don't have to be in awe of these operas. They are theatre pieces like any other, and you have to get your hands dirty to make them work."

Elder spent nearly two decades at ENO, first as a staff conductor, then for 14 years as music director. The success of the relationship he built with ENO's general director, Peter Jonas (now running the Munich opera house), and the producer David Pountney, rather obscures the fact that when Elder first became music director — as a forceful and opinionated 32-year-old — he had to fight terrible battles internally at the Coliseum. Particularly with the orchestra, who dubbed him "the Ayatollah".

Wagner?

A wall of feeling that hits you in a wall of sound

"That was because I wanted to change the way some of them felt about their jobs," Elder says. "You have to remember that in the 1970s it was possible for ENO's orchestra members to play for them. It sounds amazing now. I believed that the management had to control who was at any performance or rehearsal, not the players. It was quite a revolutionary thought for the orchestra to handle. I also wanted the same players to be present for all rehearsals and performances of difficult operas, like Peter Grimes and Wozzeck. Achieving that was the single most important way for the orchestra to develop."

When Elder left, ENO appointed Sir Edwardes — hoping, no doubt, that this gifted young conductor would turn out as the young Elder had done. The experiment failed: Edwardes resigned last autumn. "That shocked me," Elder says. "There are so few places in this country for a conductor to get experience of running an opera house. The music profession must train people to take on these roles. It's very tempting for a management just to hire guest conductors. But a real music director is someone who imparts an attitude, a style and an aspiration to a company that is otherwise lacking."

Elder says this, and he undoubtedly means it. Yet for the past two years, since leaving ENO and then the Rochester Philharmonic in America, he has been nothing but a guest conductor — utilising his huge repertoire to conduct operas in Munich and no rehearsal whatsoever (you have to go at it with absolutely no rehearsal). "I have luck on your side," he says as at the Met in Paris, in Geneva and Chicago. At 48 he is belatedly carving the reputation in high places that his talents deserve but his intense loyalty to ENO delayed.

However, nobody who knows Elder can believe that he will remain for long without a permanent operatic post. It's too much in his blood. And the job looking largest is at the Royal Opera. Bernard Haitink has said that he will relinquish the music directorship when Covent Garden closes for redevelopment. Would Elder, who conducts Arabella there next month, be interested? "I would certainly consider it," he says, with a glint in his eye.

That might seem odd. Elder is the quintessential Islington liberal: the man whom the BBC sacked from conducting the Last Night of the Proms during the Gulf War because he threatened to cut the patriotic songs. Covent Garden, on the other hand, is the very nest of Establishment privilege. Nevertheless, for Elder the musical challenge would be irresistible: to conjure for the Royal Opera the same sort of ensemble spirit that he achieved at ENO, but with the added bonus of international-class singers. And doubtless, where Elder went, the old chums Jonas and Pountney could be persuaded to follow. The prospect of the celebrated ENO triumvirate of the 1980s being transposed — lock, stock and super-ego — to the 21st-century Covent Garden would undoubtedly delight some and horrify others. It certainly wouldn't be boring.

The question was how the Japanese composer would integrate the assertive voice of the trombone with his characteristically fragile, minutely detailed, impressionistic or

Mark Elder: "I would certainly consider it," he says, about the Covent Garden job

Vienna on the verge

Nash Ensemble Wigmore Hall

THE Nash Ensemble, in one of its most revelatory series, has been observing our turning century begin in Vienna: listening to the first rumblings of the First World War; straining an ear for echoes of an even earlier Vienna. Saturday saw the culmination of four months of offerings in a concert whose mainstream elements contained as much risk and surprise as did its stranger tributaries.

Mahler's orchestral songs have been heard, illuminatingly, as chamber music in arrangements made by fellow composers; and the grand finale was Reinbert de Leeuw's arrangement of the Kindertotenlieder, with string quartet, bass, woodwind, horn, piano, harpmonium — and the voice of the young German baritone Matthias Goerne. Goerne's performance, feeding each word along tenderly and powerfully inflected lines, would have been remarkable enough in itself. But how revealing the piano-dappled lights of the first song; the solo cello melting into the clarinet line as the voice rises into the second; the piano's strange, echoing foxtrot in the third. This arrangement, which lit anew Mahler's settings of Rückert's painful poems, was in the tradition of the chamber-musical orchestral reductions played with enthusiasm at the concerts of Schoenberg's Society for Private Musical Performances. Erwin Stein's arrangement of Busoni's Berceuse élégiaque follows the same pattern: this sombre lament for the death of Busoni's mother was given a haunting performance by Philippa Davies, flute, Michael Collins, clarinet, Ian Brown, piano, Catherine Edwards, harpmonium, Corin Long, bass, and string quartet.

This, together with a robust performance of Webern's early Piano Quartet — all ten minutes of it — were the rarities. But the central classic work, Beethoven's Ghost Trio, was every bit as remarkable in its way. The Nash has a healthy way of trying out new blood, and on Saturday we heard a new guest leader, Leo Phillips, from the Chamber Orchestra of Europe. He and cellist Christopher van Kampen reacted to each other with meticulous sensitivity and, with Ian Brown's piano playing contributing to the unforced ease of converse, even in the momentum of the final presto rondo, this was a performance which will linger long in the memory.

HILARY FINCH

Trombone voluntarily

SCO/Varga Queen's Hall, Edinburgh

THE Scottish Chamber Orchestra has been excelling itself recently — not so much in performing standards, that is, as in programming. Only a couple of weeks ago it gave a most attractively compiled Spanish concert with the guitarist Sharon Isbin, and a few days after that it was accompanying Michael Collins in the first performance of Mikhail Pletnev's fearless arrangement for clarinet of Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Since then the SCO has been involved with Christian Lindberg in the first European performances (in St Andrews, Ayr and Edinburgh) of Fantasma/Cantos II — which, unlikely though it might seem, is a trombone concerto by Toru Takemitsu.

The question was how the Japanese composer would integrate the assertive voice of the trombone with his characteristically fragile, minutely detailed, impressionistic or chestral textures. The answer is that he doesn't.

The orchestral part sounds like decadent Debussy, as though the characters of Jeux had retired from the tennis court to a dance hall. They pursue their amorous manoeuvres in the new setting, but mainly in the background now as some Tommy Dorsey of a trombonist takes the stage with a sentimental number.

It is just the sort of thing which Lindberg, for whom the work was written last year, would enjoy. It is not so dramatic that he wasn't tempted to compensate by running back on to the stage of the Queen's Hall to deliver some aggressive encore of whoops and eruptions and growling discords. On the other hand, Fantasma/Cantos II clearly appeals to the crooner in him. He probably also enjoyed playing the alto trombone in three movements allegedly drawn from a larger work by Leopold Mozart: an entertaining piece so idiomatically written for the trombone of a hundred years later that it is difficult to believe in it.

The concert began with Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture and ended with the same composer's Scottish Symphony (No 3 in A minor). Though genially conducted in both cases by Gilbert Varga, neither performance offered the more necessary reassurance that the SCO has not declined in style, wind intonation and string ensemble while it has been ploughing through the more conventional programmes of the past few seasons.

GERALD LARNER

Second helping

THE TIMES
THEATRE
CLUB

Gielgud Theatre in the West End of London, starring Tom Conti and Sharon Gless. Theatre Club members can buy seats for £15 (normally £22) for the preview performances tonight, tomorrow and on Friday evening, as well as the matinees tomorrow and on Saturday. To book, telephone 0171-494 5065

NOTICE

● AFTER two sell-out summer shows in Germany and Belgium, Hot Ice is set to hit Britain. The ultimate ice spectacular, Hot Ice features laser technology, music ranging from Gertrude to Queen, and a cast of champion skaters. Club members can buy two tickets for the price of one for shows at: Royal Albert Hall, Pavilion Theatre, Feb 21 (7.30pm), 22 (7.30pm), 23 (2.30pm, 7.30pm). Tickets normally £8.50 and £16.50. Tel 0161 247 2871.
Liverpool: Empire Theatre, Feb 28 (7.30pm), Mar 1 (2.30pm). Tickets normally £9 to £16. Tel 0151-709 1555.
Bristol: Hippodrome, Mar 6 (7.30pm), 7 (7.30pm). Tickets normally £9 to £16. Tel 0117-929 9444.
Leeds: Grand Theatre, Mar 13 (2.30pm), 15 (6pm). Tickets normally £6 to £14. Tel 0113-245 9361.
Nottingham: Royal Concert Hall, Mar 26 (7.30pm). Tickets normally £14, £16. Tel 0115-948 2626

HOW TO BOOK AND JOIN

TO BOOK, please phone the listed number during normal office hours. The price printed on the ticket you receive will be the special price negotiated by the Theatre Club. There may be a transaction charge to cover postage.
TO JOIN the Theatre Club, together with your name, make payable to The Theatre Club, P.O. Box 264, Colchester CO2 3TL, or telephone 0206 791737 using your credit card. For general inquiries call 0171-387 9673

EDINBURGH

Festival Theatre Feb 14-16

● TWO tickets for the price of one (normally £5 to £7) for David Wood's musical adaptation of Enid Blyton's More Adventures of Noddy. Tel 0131-529 600

HARROGATE Harrogate Theatre Feb 16

● BUY two tickets for the price of one (normally £9.50 to £12) and attend the pre-show talk about Alan Bennett's award-winning Talking Heads. Tel 01423 502116

OLDHAM Coliseum Theatre Mar 5-23

● SAVE £3 on tickets (normally £8 to £12) for any Tues-Fri evening performance of the tribute show, Side by Side by Sondheim. Tel 0161-624 2829

PETERBOROUGH Key Theatre Feb 13-15, 20-22

● SAVE 25 per cent on tickets (normally £9) for the sparkling rock musical, Godspell. Tel 01733 52439

EPSOM Playhouse Feb 26-Mar 2

● TICKETS £4.80 and £8 (normally £6 to £10) for a new musical adaptation of Kenneth Grahame's The Wind in the Willows. Tel 01372 742555

WORKINGHAM Counaught Theatre Feb 13-17

● SAVE £1.50 on tickets (normally £5.50 to £10.50) for J.B. Priestley's classic thriller, I Have Been Here Before. Tel 01903 235333

Fitting tribute to Jones the brass

LSO Brass Barbican

IT IS now ten years since Philip Jones packed away his trumpet for the last time, causing the world-famous ensemble that bore his name to rechristen itself London Brass. Since then, Jones has been Principal of the Trinity College of Music, but his retirement offered the opportunity for a tribute from some of the many players who have reason to thank him.

Before the founding of the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble in 1951, there was virtually no repertoire in the medium. Nowadays there is a plethora of music from all periods to choose from, as Sunday's concert by the LSO Brass demonstrated.

One of the masterworks of the repertoire established in that time is Elgar Howarth's arrangement of Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition. The breathtaking skills called for by this showstopper may be found more widely today, but the handful of minor mishaps from these top players served as a reminder that it remains an extremely demanding piece. The scurrying semi-quavers depicting the market at Limoges were dispatched fearlessly, and Eric Cree's direction built to a magnificently climactic opening of the Great Gate of Kiev.

In an onstage interview, Jones commented that a greater variety of styles was expected of players in brass ensembles than in orchestras. A greater sensitivity to matters of balance and voicing too, he might have added. For this ensemble — an expanded LSO brass section — included the very same players who now routinely blast their ear-splitting way through any orchestral tutti put in front of them. Paradoxically, the exclusive company of brass players encourages them to listen to each other.

Inner voices were also heard to advantage in Christopher Mowat's arrangement of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No 3. This is another skilful transcription that throws the three instrumental groupings into relief, and the reduced ensemble managed some stylishly tapered phrasing. Whether Elgar Howarth's settings of early 17th-century English keyboard pieces (Byrd, Farnaby and Bull) can ever sound stylish on modern brass instruments is a moot point. For all the virtuosity with which the passagework was delivered, these transcriptions seemed more convincing the more they were removed from their original context.

Something that has always come a good deal easier to LSO players is the assimilation of jazz style, and the remainder of the programme was sheer delight: six movements from André Previn's Triplet for Brass, three from Jim Parker's superbly idiomatic A Londoner in New York, and Eric Cree's own arrangement of a suite from Bernstein's West Side Story.

This was masterly playing, and a worthy tribute to the man who made it all possible.

BARRY MILLINGTON

THE TIMES
PRESENTS
Valentine's Day
IN ASSOCIATION WITH
aramis

This year, experience the sweet smell of romance...

Once again, The Times offers the most romantic environment for your Valentine's Day messages. Through our exclusive arrangement with Aramis, we can send on your behalf a 30ml bottle of Tuscany Per Donna Eau de Parfum for the ladies, or Tuscany Per Uomo Eau de Toilette for the gentlemen, together with a card which reads: "Look for your message in The Times on Valentine's Day." Furthermore, the most original Valentine message published will win a weekend break at Riber Hall, Derbyshire (above), voted one of Britain's most romantic hotels. There will also be a runner-up prize of a case of champagne.

Write your message below (One word per box - minimum 3 lines)		Price	Price with Gift
		—	—
		—	—
		£19	£29
		£24	£34
		£30	£40

£5 for each extra line - further lines may be attached on a separate sheet of paper.

YOUR DETAILS		YOUR VALENTINE'S DETAILS
Initial	Surname	Name
Address		Address
Post Code		Post Code
Telephone No.		Tick box if you would like to send a gift <input type="checkbox"/>
I enclose a cheque/PO for £_____ made payable to Times Newspapers Ltd, or debit my credit card by £_____ CARD NO: _____
CREDIT CARD EXPIRY DATE: _____		Please send this coupon with remittance to Valentine's Messages, The Times, PO Box 494, 1 Virginia Street, London E1 6BL. FAX: 0171 762 7827.
SIGNATURE _____		CREDIT CARD BOOKINGS TEL: 0171 491 4000.

Can a council ignore advice?

David Crawford reports on a case that will determine a county council's powers to adopt its own structure plan

Property professionals throughout Britain are keenly awaiting the outcome of a High Court challenge to Berkshire County Council's recently adopted structure plan, which is due to be heard on April 2.

The case concerns official housing allocations for the M4 county, but Douglas Evans, the lawyer leading a House Builders Federation (HBF) challenge to the Liberal Democrat/Labour-controlled authority, sees the battle as being about more than new homes.

"Though important, housing is in a sense a proxy issue," Mr Evans, a partner and head of planning at Theodore Goddard, says. "What is really at stake is the way in which a county council is using new powers to adopt its own structure plan and ignoring the recommendations of the independent panel which carried out the plan's examination in public [EIP]."

He sees this as a potential threat to a range of property interests throughout the county — in employment-related development as much as housing. But even without these wider implications, the 40,000 additional houses which Berkshire has eventually agreed should be built, mainly in Bracknell, Newbury and Wokingham, are being criticised as insufficient to accommodate natural growth during the plan period to 2006, let alone the influx resulting from new commercial development and job creation.

Gummer: intervention

The issue arose when Berkshire, which gained self-adoption powers under the 1991 Planning Act, originally proposed only 35,670 new dwellings in its structure plan on environmental grounds. The independent EIP panel, which reviewed the plan before the council adopted it last November, recommended 48,000 homes — 8,000 above the southeast regional guidance level.

The panel advised that the original figure, proposed to protect the county's "environmental capacity", was excessively biased towards such considerations. The total of 48,000 dwellings could be accommodated without overdevelopment, it said.

Local property professionals who agree include Ian Tant, of the Barton Willmore Planning Partnership in Reading. He says: "Even 48,000 homes would not meet the work-force requirements of committed employment land. Berkshire is the most extreme case yet of divergence from panel recommendations."

Chris Perry, resident partner at Vail Williams's Reading office, fears that Berkshire "could become the poor relations among the south-eastern counties. Potential relocators do their research, and housing shortages will deter them."

Supporting them are figures which show that Berkshire has existing planning consents for 11.5 million sq ft of employment space — enough for some 60,000 new jobs. Employment, too, has been rising countywide — from 334,800 to 342,100 jobs between 1991 and 1993 — despite regional policy attempts to divert growth to eastern counties such as Kent and Essex. The only movement in the controversy so far arises from last year's intervention by John Gummer, Secretary of State for the Environment, who directed Berkshire to modify its figure to one "not less than" the 40,000 regional guidance level, leaving the final decision to the council. Berkshire's response was to comply with the direction and stick at 40,000.

Evans: crucial issue

The crucial issue, Mr Evans says, "is that, with self-adoption, the EIP panel system is now the only independent procedure for scrutinising draft structure plans and ensuring that wider public interests are considered. If panel recommendations can be ignored without good reason, then everyone in property is vulnerable to decisions over which there is no longer any effective external control."

The county council takes its stand firmly on local issues, arguing that the 40,000 homes directed by the Environment Secretary are already more than the county can take without serious damage to its environment. "We have worked hard to balance the need for housing and employment with environmental considerations," says Keith Reed, county environmental officer, who is confident of victory in the High Court.

"But we didn't start our structure plan process with a clean sheet — there were already substantial commitments to employment uses. If we give in completely to market pressures, we risk damaging an environment which is itself one of the main attractions for incoming employers."

"We are being used as a test case," Councillor John Albiston, chairman of Berkshire's environment committee, says. "We will defend our right not to be pushed beyond what we have agreed, to satisfy the Secretary of State."

If the HBF wins, Mr Evans says this will be a "warning to other local authorities — and Hampshire shows signs of following Berkshire's example — not to take undue advantage of their power to adopt their own plans". If the HBF loses, both it and commercial developers faced with adverse planning policies will feel able to question the reliance to be placed on assurances which ministers gave on the preservation of the public interest when self-adoption was extended to structure plans in 1992.

RAF base for sale

THE former RAF Alconbury, four miles northwest of Huntingdon, is to be put on the market in April by the Ministry of Defence, with the prospect of its conversion to an international distribution centre. Bidwells of Cambridge, appointed to prepare a marketing campaign for the 1,100-acre site, regards it as potentially the UK distribution industry's most significant site. Ian Hudson of Bidwells says: "The location of Alconbury and its air, road and potential rail links place it firmly in a European context."

For the first phase Huntingdonshire District Council planners prefer a 70:30 split between warehouse development and mixed development, including leisure and heritage uses. The former Second World War control tower and surrounding buildings have been preserved and could form the nucleus of a visitor centre.

AN INNOVATIVE funding deal between Hanover United Property Trust and the Lend Lease Group has enabled a start to be made on the 112,000 sq ft Clockhouse Place office scheme at Bedford Lakes, Heathrow, one of the largest speculative office schemes in the region since the early 1990s.

Hanover, which bought Bedford Lakes from the Rutland Group in 1994, says the funding represents the first UK example of the Lend Lease Group's solutions to property financing. Lend Lease has agreed to guarantee the project's construction loan, arranged with the Royal Bank of Scotland, in return for a guaranteed fee and profit participation.

Healey & Baker and Strutt & Parker are seeking to let the building as a whole or in two blocks. No quoting rent has been announced, but forecasts suggest £27.50 a sq ft for the area by mid-1997.

SPACE at the recently developed building at 159 New Bond Street, London, is to be offered at £35 a sq ft through Jones Lang Wootton on behalf of the landlord, the Swedish Life Fund Trygg Hansa. Three floors of about 7,300 sq ft each are available in an area of the market that is increasingly under-supplied.

Floors to let in New Bond Street

TO ADVERTISE
CALL: 0171 481 1986

COMMERCIAL PROPERTY

FAX:
0171 782 7828

Fairview
NEW HOMES Plc.

WE BUY SITES IN ALL LONDON
BOROUGHES AND AROUND THE M25

Fairview
NEW HOMES Plc.

50 LANCASTER ROAD, ENFIELD, MIDDLESEX EN2 0BY TEL: 0181-366 1271 FAX: 0181-366 0189 DX: 90635 ENFIELD 10 HILL STREET, MAYFAIR, LONDON W1X 7FU TEL: 0171-355 1818 FAX: 0171-355 2133 DX: 54262 PICCADILLY 1

Stansted
Modern Office Building close to Airport. Secure parking for 6 cars. Railway and bus. Office easy walking distance.
Freehold £110,000
ring 01279 815311

FREEHOLD
REIGATE (M25)
For Sale or Let.
4,500 sq ft of Office Space + Car parking.
For Further Details
Phone 01293 613234

WIMBLEDON VILLAGE
Semi serviced office suites
TO LET
Sizes subject to availability
0181 241 1921

Prime 120 Acre Farm
Could be used for dairy, beef, horses or both. Aerial view $499,000. New Grand Rustic All USA. For information contact Don Jones of Century 21 Leamington, 500 To Falls Road, W. Connecticut, CT 06460
Phone (616) 967237

DEVELOPMENT SITE
HOUSING LAND FOR SALE
WESTHAWK FARM
KINGSNORTH
ASHFORD
KENT
Outline consent for 570 units on approx 66 acres (26.7 ha)
Best offers date 8 March 1996
Contact: Brian McLeish Nigel Downman
Weatherall
22 Chancery Lane, London, WC2A 1PL
0171-405 6944

INDUSTRIAL SITE
LOW LOW RENT
PETERLEE
NORTH WEST INDUSTRIAL ESTATE
Adjacent Fisher Price Toys UK (prominently located near to the A19)

MODERN SINGLE STOREY INDUSTRIAL/WAREHOUSE UNITS
Comprising 71,500 sq. ft. and 36,673 sq. ft. Exceptional Electrical Capacity Available.
Plus Office Accommodation 71,500 sq. ft. eaves height 18' 6" 36,673 sq. ft. eaves height 18' 0" Available singly or jointly.
Rent from 50p per sq. ft.
Flexible Terms.
Please telephone
0161 7400116
anytime

OFFICE TO LET
HUNTINGDON CAMBS
Office suite from 854-4,154 sq ft to let on flexible terms from £4.85 p/sf. Kings Cross to under the hour.
Tel: Baker Storey Matthews 01480 451 578
OFFICE FOR SALE
FOR SALE
CORHAM, SURREY
FREEHOLD OFFICE INVESTMENT
MODERN BUILDING COMPLETED 5 YEARS AGO
INCOME £37,500 P.A. EX.
all enquiries Andrew MacLennan
STEVENS SCANLAN & PARTNERS
Telephone
0171 834 4806

Residential Property
— Yorkshire and North East

British Coal is offering for sale by private treaty 251 properties in Yorkshire, Northumberland, Durham and Tyne and Wear.

The Portfolio is divided into two Regional packages: Yorkshire and North East, subdivided into eight Lots in total, comprising vacant and tenanted properties, sites of former dwellings and Ground Rents.

The housing, which is varied in both type and location comprises modern and older detached, semi-detached, terraced houses and bungalows, located in urban, village and rural areas.

Offers are invited for the Portfolio as a whole, or individual Regional packages, Lots, or a combination of Lots.

Details are available from the following offices of the sole agents, DTZ Debenham Thorpe:

Leeds	- Contact: Michael Heaps Tel: 0113 254 3000
Newcastle	- Contact: Chris Rice Tel: 0191 201 0083
London	- Contact: Mark Wesson Tel: 0171 408 1161

Closing date for offers 12 noon, 29 March 1996.

DTZ Debenham Thorpe
International Property Advisors

British COAL

100 CHALK FARM ROAD LONDON NW1
OFFICES
3rd Floor 2,770 sq. ft.
Top Floor 4,430 sq. ft.
Modern, newly refurbished & bright space. Air conditioned, carpeted, 24 hour access. New security provisions. 8/12 car parking spaces.
Letting Details:
LEAVER CHARLES
Chartered Surveyors
Tel: 0171 935 6501

INVESTMENT FOR SALE
WILTSHIRE
Thriving Dance Studio Business situated in commercial area of busy town. 1,400 sq ft studios plus offices and with 2 bed apartment. Fully fitted going concern.
£175,000 Freehold, Furnished, Fixtures and Business.
Tel: Hobbs & Chambers 01793 522375

UNLAPIDATED GRADE II LISTED BUILDING with pop for conversion into 7 dwellings and new build for 6 and 4 bed houses in the grounds. Sit. in small Dorset village. OFFERS INVITED OVER £200,000 FIRMAL.

OUTLINE CONSENT FOR THE 24 DWELLINGS, WENTWOLD, DORSET. Subj. to conditions and various Section agreements. OFFERS INVITED OVER £500,000 FIRMAL.

PALMER SNELL
TEL: 01202 300678

GUERNSEY
Head for Sale
Tax Haven Island, 10 bedrooms, 10 bathrooms & bar, Full Part-Ex/Lease
£795,000
Tel: 01481 39339

FOR SALE
Licensed Landfill Quarry Site and Ex Ltd Company with 63 acres, Full Planning Permission Granted, includes Retail Building, Yard, P.O.A.
For information Tel: 01274 2274
Reply to Box No 2874

DEVELOPMENT SITE
LOTHIAN REGIONAL COUNCIL
FOR SALE
PRIME DEVELOPMENT SITE EDINBURGH
Approx 1.21 Hectares (3 Acres)
Adjacent to Asda South Roundabout fronting on to the A1, Edinburgh. Possible uses include Filling Station, Fast Food Outlet, Travel Lodge or Retail Department of Property Services, Lothian Regional Council
154 McDonald Road
EDINBURGH EH7 4NN
Tel: 0131-556 5242

OFFICE TO LET
HELPIRE
SERVICED OFFICE SPECIALISTS
YOUR IDEAL OFFICE NOW! IMPARTIAL ADVICE TODAY!
0800 61 44 76
FULL FREE LISTING SERVICE

OFFICE FOR SALE
SOUGHT INDEPENDENT DEVELOPER
I own a 5,000 sq ft 3 floor purpose built office block in the centre of Swansea. Planning permission for other uses, such as, bar, club, restaurant, retail outlet or car park area feasible.
I'm looking for a partner with the expertise, initiative and contacts to develop the property to maximise its potential. The deal would offer you a fair share of resulting profits based on input. This is negotiable.
Interested?
Get me some information about yourself if you want to know more.
Ref: ASPP
Fax: 01792 468045

Millionaire
France who guillotine Scotland
Thomson rail
Wattana lets Hick

Millionaire plans to revive Richmond's fortunes

Elliott: 'driving force'

THE attraction that English rugby in the open era will continue to have for players from the other home unions — and further afield — was emphasised yesterday when Richmond announced an investment worth nearly £3 million intended to restore the club to the top flight.

Richmond, 135 years old, were a founder member of the Rugby Football Union. They are top of the third division of the Courage Clubs Championship, but have ambitious plans: they seek first-division rugby, competition in Europe and the inauguration of an academy for youth.

The means to these ends have been given them by Ashley Levent, a 35-year-old millionaire now living in Monaco. Though his involvement has to be formally sanctioned by the club's 1,300 members at a special general meeting next month, Levent will put £2.5 million into the club and will underwrite a share issue for a sum not far short of £500,000.

In return he will hold a controlling interest of 80 per cent, with members holding the remaining 20 per cent and contributing two directors to a five-man board which will run Richmond. Though no overt moves will be made to recruit new players until after the general meeting, Richmond has already made unofficial approaches to members of the England squad.

Richmond are the third club in London, following Saracens and Nigel Wray, and the Harlequins deal with NEC, to attract substantial financial support in rugby's new era. The capital has always been a Mecca for ambitious players and this will only increase in what is certain to become a ferocious battle for talent, though yesterday it seemed a partnership between the Welsh Rugby Union, Bridgend and Ogwr Borough Council had dissuaded Robert Howley, the Wales scrum half, from moving from Bridgend to Saracens.

However, Levent's involvement is also instructive because of his previous connection with lowly Winchester. He has effectively been the owner of the Hampshire league one club since 1993, and though International Rugby Football Board regulations forbid one individual owning more than one club, a structure has been put in place which may establish Winchester as, in effect, a feeder club to Richmond.

"The success of Winchester has been nothing short of remarkable," Symon Elliott, a business colleague of Levent and Richmond's chief executive-designate, said. "This prompted Ashley's desire to become involved in the game at a higher level. We believe Richmond can be a driving force in British and European rugby."

Like Saracens, with their capture of the Australian, Michael Lynagh, Richmond will hope for a "headline-grabbing" signing as an indication of intent. They seek to establish a core of quality players of international or near-international status.

Richmond are also in the unique position of sharing facilities with another leading club, London Scottish. They have been partners at the Athletic Ground for more than a century and Richmond officials said that whatever developments they put in place will be done after consultation with the Scots.

Scotland's clubs on the attack in battle for Europe

By MARK SOUSTER

A DECISION to allow districts, rather than clubs, to represent Scotland in the European Cup next season might be beneficial in the short term but would ultimately weaken the structure of Scottish rugby, the senior clubs claimed yesterday as they revealed their proposals for the future of the game north of the border.

The clubs, who will present their case for inclusion in Europe at a special general meeting of the Scottish Rugby Union (SRU) on Friday, dismissed the union's pro-district document as a paper which "does not address the requirements of the changing rugby world and the opportunities which the new professional era present".

They argue that clubs are the traditional power-base of the game in Scotland and are best placed to retain and attract the top players in the domestic game, internationalists who would otherwise be lost to England. Ambitious clubs would attract better coaches, produce better players and create a stronger and much wider base than the "restrictions provided by a narrow base of three or four district teams".

Those districts would, according to the clubs, become "super clubs" themselves, the antithesis of what the SRU intends. Players would be under contract, administrative costs would increase and the number of players exposed to a higher standard of rugby would be restricted. Clubs would be relegated to the status of nurseries and, with no incentive, would soon lose ambition.

The Scottish selectors are today expected to name an unchanged side, for the third consecutive international, to play Wales in Cardiff in the five nations' championship on February 17.

Kenny Logan, so far ignored by Scotland in the five nations', plays his first competitive game of the year for the Development XV that meets New South Wales in Galashiels on Sunday. He replaces Hugh Gilmour, of Heriot's, who is injured.

The SRU yesterday went live on the Internet, the first step towards what it intends will be an interactive system encompassing merchandise sales and ticket booking.

SCOTTISH DEVELOPMENT XV: G Fraser (London Scottish), A Stanger (Hawick), I Ryan (Dumfries), A James (Paisley), K Logan (Glasgow), M McEwan (Glasgow), A Nicoll (Dumfries), R McInnes (Dumfries), S Scott (Melrose), M Stewart (Blackburn), M Muir (Edinburgh Academical), K Stewart (Cardiff), B Wood (Glasgow), G Hamilton (Leicester), S Givens (Worcestershire), G McIlwain (Glasgow), K Dickson (Boroughmuir). Referee: S Percy.

Three new caps to face Ireland

France wheel out guillotine after Scotland defeat

By DAVID HANDS, RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

HAVING had their hopes of a grand slam shattered by the Scots at Murrayfield last Saturday, the French selectorial guillotine fell with a vengeance yesterday. Four members of the XV beaten 19-14 by Scotland lost their places for the next round of the five nations' championship, against Ireland in Paris on February 17, and the positional merry-go-round is reminiscent of the 1970s.

The casualties include Olivier Merle, the lock who received a yellow card for stamping at Murrayfield, and Alain Penaud — two players of considerable experience. Philippe Carbonneau and Michel Périé, both capped for the first time this season at scrum half and loose-head prop respectively, are relegated to the replacements' bench, and caps are awarded to three newcomers.

England's front row may not be surprised to see Franck Tournaire, the Narbonne tight-head prop, elevated to the senior side. Tournaire, 23, was part of a hard-bitten trio in the A international last month and, to accommodate him, Christian Califfano moves to loose-head prop.

Abdelatif Benazzi must count among the world's best back-row forwards, but he moves from blind-side flanker to lock, where he replaces Merle. This leaves a vacancy for Richard Castel.

The 23-year-old student was not first choice in the Toulouse team which won the Heineken Cup last month, but his vigorous play won him a place among the replacements against England, and now he takes the final step.

The third new cap goes to Olivier Campan and illustrates the problems France have in creating a successful midfield. They thought they had found one when Thomas Castaignède and Richard Dourthe linked in the autumn; now Dourthe remains suspended and Castaignède, whose dropped goal beat England, moves to stand-off half.

He changes places with Thierry Lacroix, who thought that he had found his correct position when chosen in the No 10 shirt against England. Now, though, he reverts to the position where he has won most of his caps, alongside back for Agen.

FRANCE: J-L Sadoirey (Colomiers); E Hernandez (Toulouse), T Lacroix (Dax), O Campan (Agen), P Saint-Amant (Montauban), J-C Castaignède (Toulouse), S Accoceberry (Gloucester), R Dourthe (Bordeaux), C Califfano (Toulouse), J-M Gonzalez (Bayonne), F Tournaire (Narbonne), R Castel (Toulouse), A Benazzi (Agen), O Périé (Dax), L Carbonneau (Narbonne), F Penaud (Dax), R Merle (Stade Français), P Bouchard (Stade Français), S Glas (Bordeaux), F Carbonneau (Toulouse), S Dupagne (Toulouse), M de Beaudement (Toulouse), M Périé (Toulouse).

Agén, of course, is Philippe Sella's club, and it may be some small comfort to England to know that, like them, the French are hard-pressed to replace their great players.

Sella's 13-year international career ended when he announced his retirement — his club future has yet to be resolved — in December and, since then, events have conspired against France.

Yet the number of changes they are prepared to make in midstream is remarkable, though French pundits do not necessarily see it that way. The changes reflect the disappointment felt by Jean-Claude Skrela, the coach, who said that he felt let down by the display against Scotland.

"If players want to be regarded as professionals, they must accept the responsibilities that involves," Skrela said. "The problem with this team is that they seem to be unable to put together three or four good games in succession. They must become more self-critical."

The final change restores Guy Accoceberry to scrum half and recreates an international partnership which appeared against Romania in the Latin Cup last October. That was a notable match for Castaignède since he scored 22 points; he now plays in the position he occupied in junior football, though forced by the presence in the Toulouse side of Christophe Deyland to move to centre.

In the past four years, France have used 16 different combinations at half-back, which may help to account for their swoops and dips in form over that period. Quite what the Irish counterpart from this latest selection remains to be seen but, after losing to Scotland themselves, they have enough problems of their own.

The Ireland selectors' visit to Belfast last night to watch Ulster against New South Wales was made less relevant by the late withdrawal of three injured contenders, Jeremy Davidson, Dennis McBride and Jonathan Bell, though they would still have been interested to see Paddy Johns back at lock. The side to play France in Paris will be named on Saturday.

Accoceberry, right, returns as the France scrum half to play Ireland on February 17 in place of Carbonneau

Thomson rails against keeping up appearances

As the Heineken Classic concluded in Perth on Sunday, one of the most interested observers at The Vines was a stocky man with stout brown shoes, a skew-whiff smile and crinkly black hair that rose and fell back from his forehead in waves.

Peter Thomson, five times the Open champion between 1954 and 1965, watched with pleasure as five of his fellow Australians finished in the top ten of the first joint event between the tours of Australia and Europe. But he was disconcerted that appearance money, which he has fought against for years, remains such an important issue in the modern game.

"I am pleased with golf these days, except for the ugliness of appearance money in these parts and in Europe," Thomson, 66, who was president of the Australian Professional Golfers' Association for three decades, said. "Sport is sport. It is not a business or entertainment. The moment entertainment overtakes sport you have wrestling. If you pay people to strut the stage that is disastrous."

"Australian golf has never been stronger but it is under the spell of Greg Norman. It is hard to mount a series of events without him. It would be good if he gave Australian golf more help — by not taking so much money out of the pot. This is a very expensive sponsorship by Heineken and it may or may not be profitable. If Heineken could get the same exposure for half the price there would be no question as to its profitability."

John Hopkins hears one of golf's senior statesmen take Greg Norman to task

Who knows, Heineken may decide it is a poor investment. In my time there has been a procession of sponsors who do it for a year or two and then decide they can no longer afford it.

"Greg and I are not friends. I live in Australia, he in the United States. We are polite when we meet. As a player he is amazing, unique even. His swing is technically correct now. We thought it was perfect when he was 25. But he can make such hard work of some simple shots, it's almost as if he is unguided. Almost any drive involves tortuous preparation. He can take such a long time to do something that others do in the flick of an eyelid."

Thomson's trenchant views have appeared in the columns of the Melbourne Age newspaper for 40 years. He was the first professional to augment his prize-money with income from writing, and one of the first to leave golf and attempt to enter politics.

Memories of his unsuccessful attempt to get into the Victorian state legislature in 1982 have been revived because his son, Andrew, is a candidate in the general election in Australia on March 2. "He is a Liberal and standing in a safe Liberal seat — I expect him to win," Thomson

Thomson: trenchant said. "I loved the manipulation of the media, which is what politics is all about. The media like to be tickled. I had a constituency of 44,000 and I knocked on 8,000 doors over 15 months. There were 19,000 Greeks and four out of five of them voted Labour. We Liberals were demolished by a landslide. Had I got in I would still be there."

Instead, Thomson voyaged to the United States, made a small fortune on the seniors' tour and began the profitable golf course-building firm he now runs. Though his travelling keeps him away from his home in Melbourne for six months of the year, he has discovered the delights of being able to play golf without marking a card. "Pencil-less golf, I call it," Thomson said. "For the first time for 40 years I can play without returning a score. It's wonderful. I always say to people I am two Scotchmen short of perfect health and two rounds away from competitive pitch."

Wattana lets Hicks off hook

By PHIL YATES

ANDY HICKS, who produced a 67 clearance to defeat James Wattana 9-8 on the final black in the last 16 of the United Kingdom snooker championship in November, benefited from two similar escapes to beat the Thai 6-4 in the Benson and Hedges Masters at Wembley Conference Centre yesterday.

Hicks, a sponsor's wild-card entry who compiled three century breaks during a 5-3 win over David Roe in the previous round, won the third frame on a respooned black, 13-11, but Wattana, who has stumbled through a low-key season, won the next three frames.

Yet, just when the match appeared to be slipping away, Hicks levelled at 4-4 with a well-constructed 45 break, and when Wattana, leading 45-9 in the ninth frame, missed a simple blue, Hicks cleared to pink with 56.

That was 5-4 in favour of the left-handed Devonian, who figured in the semi-finals of both the world and United Kingdom championships last year, and he secured a quarter-final match against John Parrott by fashioning a 47 clearance in the tenth frame after Wattana, usually such a reliable middle-pocket potter, had jawed a red when 32-27 ahead.

Jimmy White uncharacteristically burnt the midnight oil before beating Dave Harold, 6-5 in the second round on Monday. White, who had led 5-2, passed a stern examination by playing a faultless deciding frame.

"For me to beat a good player under sudden-death conditions is a major feat at the moment," White, who must have feared the worst after losing 5-4 to Chris Small in the Regal Welsh Open last week from two up with three to play, said.

The future of the Benson and Hedges Masters, the sport's richest invitation tournament, which began in 1975, has been secured until 2001. A five-year contract, worth £4 million, was signed yesterday by snooker's longest-established sponsor and the sport's governing body, the World Professional Billiards and Snooker Association. A total prize fund of £500,000 will be available at the event next year, with a record £135,000 going to the winner.

Ceron seeks London hat-trick

By DAVID POWELL, ATHLETICS CORRESPONDENT

DIONICIO CERON will attempt an unprecedented hat-trick of men's London Marathon titles on April 21. His participation was announced yesterday, as was that of Malgorzata Sobanska, the defending women's champion.

Ceron's earnings from the London event, already some $500,000 (about £325,000), will be close to $1 million if he can set a world-best time.

The mark which has stood for eight years, was set in Rotterdam by Belayneh Dinsamo, from Ethiopia, at 2hr 06min 55sec. Ceron, from Mexico, is the only athlete to have run sub-2:09 twice in London: 2:08.53 in 1994 and 2:08.30 in 1995.

On neither occasion did he have the best of the weather.

Blustery in 1994, the winds returned last year, albeit less severe on a warm day.

"If we can get something between the two, without the wind, he is clearly somebody who can run under 2:08," Dave Bedford, the director of the elite race, said.

Bedford promises a field of "higher international quality" than for any of the previous 15 London Marathons. Under a new sponsor, Flora, other overseas signings have been made, but Bedford is not naming names yet. The leading Britons, of those announced thus far, are Eamonn Martin and Paul Evans.

Ceron is the only man to win twice in London but he had to settle for the silver medal at the world athletics championships in Gothenburg last year, where he was beaten by Martin Fz. of Spain. "Winning London for a third time would make up for Gothenburg," Ceron said.

Sobanska, from Poland, was a surprise winner last year. "Nobody in Poland expected her to win," Piotr Markowski, her coach, said. "The federation, journalists, and even her family were all surprised."

"Her family were watching on Eurosport and they were all crying — mother, aunt, sister, father."

The handkerchiefs may be out again in Poznan this spring. So keen is Sobanska to repeat her London experience that she took the initiative and contacted Bedford to ask to come back. Usually, the race director has to go chasing.

THE TIMES

Atlases of the World

Now! No handling charges and FREE postage to all our UK customers. Offer applies United Kingdom only. Also available from good Bookshops.

★★★★★★★★★★

The Times Atlas of the World

9th Comprehensive (De Luxe) Edn £85
7th Concise Edition (15"x11"x1.5") £45
3rd Family Edition (12.5"x9.2"x1.1") £17.99
Reference Edition (12.5"x9.2"x0.8") £12.99
Compact Edition (9"x6.5"x0.65") £8.99
Mini (Pocket) Edn (6.2"x4.2"x0.65") £5.99

□□□□□□□□

The Times Atlas of World History

Concise Edition (Paperback) £14.99
Compact Edition £9.99
The Times Atlas of Archaeology £35
The Times Atlas of the Second World War 50th Anniversary Edition £27.50
The Times Atlas European History £25
The Times London History Atlas £22.99
The Times Illust. World History £25
The Times Illust. History of Europe £25

Also available □□□□□□

The Times 1000 1996 - Top Business Guide - £35
The Times Guide to the European Parliament £25 to the Peoples of Europe £15.99 to the Single European Market £8.99 to the New British State NOW ONLY £9.99 to the Middle East £8.99
to World Organisations NEW £16.99
The Times Good University Guide 1995/6 £8.99
The Times Night Sky 1996 (Guide Booklet) £3.50
Please send cheques or postal orders (no credit cards)
payable to Akom Ltd, 51 Manor Lane, London SE13 5QW
Enquiries: 0181 852 4575 (24 hours)
Delivery up to 8 days (UK)

Drop-outs deepen Sri Lanka's sense of loss

If athletes don't cheer you up when your life is miserable, then what on earth is the point of them? And God knows, the people of Sri Lanka need cheering up. I am not suggesting for a second that a few cricket matches could diminish the horror of the Colombo bombing, but a spot of decent sport could, at least, allow the citizens of Colombo to set it aside for a few hours.

Yet Australia and West Indies are all set to drop out of their matches in Colombo. Thus they fail in their duty to Colombo, to Sri Lanka, to cricket and to the entire concept of international sport.

'Australia have made a dreadful error of vision'

Sri Lanka is a sad and lovely island and, in 1981, I spent a happy couple of months there. I remember drinking the demon arak and talking late into the night with my late friend, Nalin: black sheep, as he told me, a man who, among other memorable achievements, pioneered the plays of Jean Genet in Colombo.

Over the arak, we talked politics and cricket, for this is an island full of both. While I was in Colombo the police, seconded from the south to the northern, Tamil areas, had rioted, raiding booze shops, attacking Tamils and torching the library in Jaffna, destroying a treasure-house of centuries-old Tamil manuscripts.

Jaffna was considered a no-go area so, naturally, I went, not brave but curious, eager for a damn good story (I wrote it up for the Far East Economic Review). I encountered not violence but sadness, staying with a once-rich Tamil family reduced to taking in boarders, their home and property in the south destroyed by looters. They were not angry, certainly not supporters of the Tamil Tigers: just sad.

As I was returning south, waiting for a bus, a cyclist stopped, dismounting with that leg-flick that modesty requires of a dhoti-wearer. He asked me the all-important question of that year: "How is that bottom?" Meaning, of course, Botham.

Politics, sadness, cricket. All part of Sri Lankan life. Cricket is important because, in the midst of troubles, nothing cheers as much as triviality. Tickets for the Australia-West Indies match in Colombo sold out in two hours; they cost as much as the Sri Lankan average monthly wage. It is Australia's blessing to be free of war. As a result, they have come to a dreadful error of vision. They think that cricket is actually important. More, they think that cricketers are important, that cricketers have no duties beyond sport and themselves. I am not saying that the idea of playing cricket in Colombo is a comfortable one. It remains true, however, that apart from the horrific exception of Munich in 1972, with the murder of the Israeli competitors, athletes have not, thank God, been the target of lethal political action. It is also true that England's 1984-85 cricket tour of India was similarly affected by political horrors. The Prime Minister, Indira

Gandhi, was assassinated; so, a few days later, was the British Deputy High Commissioner, Percy Norris. Naturally, the cricketers were upset and wanted to go home. Instead, they went to Sri Lanka. Then, when the official period of mourning was over, they went back to India, continued the tour and won the series.

Top international athletes are, on the whole, a xenophobic bunch. But it is not that they are uninterested in abroad: they are not interested in much outside the team or, if involved in individual sports, anything outside their own heads.

This is not really a criticism, it is simply an aspect of the sporting mentality. Call it single-mindedness. I remember when covering a tour of India, I visited the Konarak Temple. You would expect most cricketers to display a passing interest in this monument, a short drive away from the team hotel. After all, it happens to be covered—absolutely encrusted—with pedantically detailed carvings of boozing girls in a series of elaborate priapic grapples. But I think only Derek Pringle visited it, though perhaps Robin Smith went too. When West Bromwich Albion made their historic visit to China, only three of them went to visit the Great Wall. These, inevitably, were the three black players known as the Three Degrees, Cyrille Regis, the late Laurie Cunningham and Brendon Batson.

Xenophobia, then, is part of sporting life. It has to be every time you visit a country, it represents the enemy. All this is inevitable, but those of us who are not international athletes should not make the same error. That appears to be what has happened to Australia and, by craven imitation, West Indies.

A suggestion, then. The New Zealanders, I am sure, are above such a xenophobic and pusillanimous failure in the duty owed to international sport. England and New Zealand should offer to play their opening match in Colombo. That way the poor, sad, bewildered Aussies will be able to play their own opening fixture against Sri Lanka in the comfort and safety of Ahmedabad. Perhaps West Indies will meet Australia in the final of the World Cup. If so, we can only hope that they both lose.

'They fail in their duty to Colombo and to cricket'

Dividing lines from ground-laying meeting reappear

Why trouble has dogged World Cup from start

By Simon Wilde

IT WAS NOT originally intended that the sixth cricket World Cup should be staged on the Asian sub-continent. As long ago as 1989, the tournament was earmarked for England. Then came the infamous meeting of the International Cricket Council (ICC) at Lord's on February 2, 1993, which one experienced administrator described as a "shambles".

That meeting, which was destined to last 13 hours, reached deadlock because India and Pakistan, already promised the seventh staging of the event, had submitted — along with Sri Lanka — a financially superior bid to England's for the 1996 tournament.

Neither bid could secure the necessary two-thirds majority of votes. England were backed by Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and West Indies; the three Asian countries by Zimbabwe and a majority of associate member nations. Each of the nine Test-playing countries carried two votes, each of the 19 associate members one. Under both bids all would have been financially rewarded, though slightly better under the Asian one.

The impasse was resolved by England's magnanimous decision to step aside. "After hours getting nowhere," Alan Smith, the chief executive of the Test and County Cricket Board, said, "it was clear that under ICC rules there was deadlock. Indeed, there seemed a grave danger of the ICC totally disintegrating. In the best and wider interests of the world game, England agreed to withdraw their bid."

It is noticeable that in the present dispute over whether matches should be staged in Sri Lanka, Zimbabwe and Kenya, an associate member, remain aligned with the hosts, while Australia and West Indies stay in the opposite camp.

This is probably a coincidence, although Kenya and Zimbabwe may feel an obligation to stand by those they supported three years ago. And while England have expressed sympathy for the dilemma that faces Australia and West Indies, South Africa — through the mouth of Ali Bacher — have not.

There will certainly be several delegates who attended the Lord's meeting in 1993 smiling ruefully and saying to themselves that it would not have been thus had the tournament gone to its first home. That would be a trifle unfair because the previous time the World Cup was staged on the sub-continent, in 1987, it passed off with scarcely a hitch and the organisers were widely praised.

Ironically, the Cup was won on that occasion by Australia. Under the leadership of Allan Border, a young side reached fulfilment, coping well with the difficulties of the heat and humidity. The tournament, hosted only by India and Pakistan, was played under the slogan Cricket for Peace.

Since then, though, the sub-continent has descended into deeper and more intractable difficulties. Apart from the long-running troubles in Sri Lanka, relations between India and Pakistan have deteriorated, with border skirmishes a regular occurrence.

India and Pakistan have not met on anything but a neutral venue for seven years because of threats of disruption from fundamentalists, and have been kept apart in the qualifying stages. Another irony is that the organisers discussed what should be done if the sides met during the knockout stages and considered switching the match, for security reasons, to Colombo. The idea was discounted.

Some, but not all, of the problems of the past week might have been eased had the organisation been left to the ICC, but it was decided at that

The 1987 World Cup was a triumph for the organisers, and Border, the winning captain same fateful meeting at Lord's in 1993 that Pakistan, the joint Pakistan-India-Sri Lanka organising committee, should act as agents for the ICC.

That was in the days before the ICC had full independence from Marylebone Cricket Cricket — whose secretary and president automatically occupied senior positions within the ICC — and such a situation will not happen again. Also, the venue for the World Cup is now determined by fixed rota, with England scheduled to stage the event next, in 1999. The cost to the Sri Lanka cricket board of the events of the past week may be great. It had been looking forward, especially to the matches against Australia and West Indies at the 35,000-seat Premadasa Stadium, which were sold out but will not now take place — at least not in Sri Lanka.

The board has not yet decided whether to refund tickets and is fearful of losing money from advertising revenue and television rights. Pictom is looking at the financial obligations of participating teams, but there is believed to be little in the agreement signed by the competing countries in the way of a penalty or liability clauses if they refuse to fulfil their fixtures.

TV link sets up possible Hamed and Bruno bill

By Sukumar Sen

TWO OF Britain's leading sporting attractions, Frank Bruno and Naseem Hamed, may feature in one of the most exciting boxing presentations seen in this country. Hamed will defend his World Boxing Organisation (WBO) featherweight title on March 16, at the Scottish Exhibition Centre, Glasgow, just a few hours before Bruno steps into the ring against Mike Tyson in Las Vegas.

The bouts will be shown on Sky Television, but the spectators at Hamed's bout may be able to see Bruno's defence on the big screen in the hall. Frank Warren, the promoter of the Glasgow show, is discussing the logistics of putting on the double feature with Don King, Tyson's promoter, and Showtime, the American cable television company.

Hamed's contest, which will be against Said Laval, of Nigeria, will also be shown live in the United States. Joe Bugner may also be on the Glasgow undercard.

"There is a possibility of Bruno being shown [at the Scottish Exhibition Centre]," Warren said. "We have to finalise what Sky are doing. But it will be one of the biggest nights for British boxing."

Hamed said that he regretted not being on the Bruno card in Las Vegas, but added: "I like being the main attraction because I think that is where my role is." Warren said: "People are going to be sitting up in the morning wanting to see the Bruno fight. They have got nothing else to do, so I thought, 'let's get this one on'."

An injured right hand has prevented Hamed boxing since he won the WBO title from Steve Robinson in September. He said that he had not required an operation on his hand, as had been reported, but had undergone cortisone injections and physiotherapy. Hamed is back in training but has not started sparring. Nonetheless, the Sheffield boxer insisted that he would be in shape to "knock out Laval" in March.

After the Glasgow bout, Hamed has his sights set on a defence against Arnulfo Castillo, of Mexico, and a challenge to Azumah Nelson for the super-featherweight title in September in Britain.

FOR COMPETITIVE INSURANCE CALL SWINTON
0800 600 700
0523 450 451

SNOW REPORTS
	Depth (cm)	Conditions	Runs to resort	Weather (°C)	Last snow
	L	U	Piste	Off-piste	On-piste
ANDORRA
Soldeu	70	180	powder	powder	open	2 8/2
			(70/121 lifts open, fresh powder to arrive, windy)
AUSTRIA
Kitzbühel	5	75	ice	varied	art. fine	-3 5/2
			(57/64 lifts open, great piste skiing on upper slopes)
Mayrhofen	5	35	ice	varied	closed	-8 4/2
			(22/30 lifts open, icy/warm areas, snow forecast)
Obergurgl	40	100	good	good	open	-14 5/2
			(Resort fully open, near perfect conditions)
Schladming	50	60	good	powder	ice	-5 5/2
			(Resort fully open, excellent skiing at all levels)
FRANCE
Alpe d'Huez	75	230	good	varied	open	-4 6/2
			(72/92 lifts open, fresh powder, improving conditions)
Les Arcs	35	165	good	varied	open	-3 6/2
			(33/77 lifts open, most areas essentially good)
La Tania	20	70	ice	varied	closed	-3 5/2
			(62/68 lifts open, great piste skiing in Courchevel)
Tignes	85	145	good	powder	good	-14 6/2
			(47/51 lifts open, excellent skiing at all levels)
ITALY
Cervinia	100	300	good	powder	good	-14 2/2
			(All 25 lifts open, near perfect conditions)
SWITZERLAND
C Montina	0	110	ice	varied	closed	-2 5/2
			(34/41 lifts open, upper slopes good, patchy low snow)
Mürren	20	110	good	varied	open	-5 5/2
			(10/13 lifts open, upper levels good, Schilthorn hard)
St Moritz	40	40	ice	varied	open	-5 2/2
			(few lower slopes, good otherwise)

Source: Ski Club of Great Britain. L - lower slopes; U - upper; art - artificial.

WORD-WATCHING

Answers from page 43

COXCOMB
(b) A concited ass. Much the same as popinjay, but with the emphasis more on the ass than the popinjay. The two terms can be used in the one insult without redundancy. The etymology is from cock's comb — the cap originally worn by professional jesters or fools, such as Feste and Touchstone.

REPULULATE
(c) To sprout again as a plant, to recur as a disease. Repululating is not a nice thing to happen. This is the right verb to describe the reappearance of your beloved's young brother at the sitting-room door while you are engaged in an affectionate tête-à-tête with the dear girl.

BLABAGO
(d) A criminal environment, from the Greek for a congregation of villains and sinners.

JACULIFEROUS
(e) Possessing spines like darts, from the Latin jaculum a dart or javelin + ferre, ferre, tuli, tulam I bear or carry.

SOLUTION TO WINNING CHESS MOVE
1 Bh7+ 2 Qxb7+ 3 Kxb7 4 Rxb7 5 Rxb7 6 Rxb7 7 Rxb7 8 Rxb7 9 Rxb7 10 Rxb7 11 Rxb7 12 Rxb7 13 Rxb7 14 Rxb7 15 Rxb7 16 Rxb7 17 Rxb7 18 Rxb7 19 Rxb7 20 Rxb7 21 Rxb7 22 Rxb7 23 Rxb7 24 Rxb7 25 Rxb7 26 Rxb7 27 Rxb7 28 Rxb7 29 Rxb7 30 Rxb7 31 Rxb7 32 Rxb7 33 Rxb7 34 Rxb7 35 Rxb7 36 Rxb7 37 Rxb7 38 Rxb7 39 Rxb7 40 Rxb7 41 Rxb7 42 Rxb7 43 Rxb7 44 Rxb7 45 Rxb7 46 Rxb7 47 Rxb7 48 Rxb7 49 Rxb7 50 Rxb7 51 Rxb7 52 Rxb7 53 Rxb7 54 Rxb7 55 Rxb7 56 Rxb7 57 Rxb7 58 Rxb7 59 Rxb7 60 Rxb7 61 Rxb7 62 Rxb7 63 Rxb7 64 Rxb7 65 Rxb7 66 Rxb7 67 Rxb7 68 Rxb7 69 Rxb7 70 Rxb7 71 Rxb7 72 Rxb7 73 Rxb7 74 Rxb7 75 Rxb7 76 Rxb7 77 Rxb7 78 Rxb7 79 Rxb7 80 Rxb7 81 Rxb7 82 Rxb7 83 Rxb7 84 Rxb7 85 Rxb7 86 Rxb7 87 Rxb7 88 Rxb7 89 Rxb7 90 Rxb7 91 Rxb7 92 Rxb7 93 Rxb7 94 Rxb7 95 Rxb7 96 Rxb7 97 Rxb7 98 Rxb7 99 Rxb7 100 Rxb7 101 Rxb7 102 Rxb7 103 Rxb7 104 Rxb7 105 Rxb7 106 Rxb7 107 Rxb7 108 Rxb7 109 Rxb7 110 Rxb7 111 Rxb7 112 Rxb7 113 Rxb7 114 Rxb7 115 Rxb7 116 Rxb7 117 Rxb7 118 Rxb7 119 Rxb7 120 Rxb7 121 Rxb7 122 Rxb7 123 Rxb7 124 Rxb7 125 Rxb7 126 Rxb7 127 Rxb7 128 Rxb7 129 Rxb7 130 Rxb7 131 Rxb7 132 Rxb7 133 Rxb7 134 Rxb7 135 Rxb7 136 Rxb7 137 Rxb7 138 Rxb7 139 Rxb7 140 Rxb7 141 Rxb7 142 Rxb7 143 Rxb7 144 Rxb7 145 Rxb7 146 Rxb7 147 Rxb7 148 Rxb7 149 Rxb7 150 Rxb7 151 Rxb7 152 Rxb7 153 Rxb7 154 Rxb7 155 Rxb7 156 Rxb7 157 Rxb7 158 Rxb7 159 Rxb7 160 Rxb7 161 Rxb7 162 Rxb7 163 Rxb7 164 Rxb7 165 Rxb7 166 Rxb7 167 Rxb7 168 Rxb7 169 Rxb7 170 Rxb7 171 Rxb7 172 Rxb7 173 Rxb7 174 Rxb7 175 Rxb7 176 Rxb7 177 Rxb7 178 Rxb7 179 Rxb7 180 Rxb7 181 Rxb7 182 Rxb7 183 Rxb7 184 Rxb7 185 Rxb7 186 Rxb7 187 Rxb7 188 Rxb7 189 Rxb7 190 Rxb7 191 Rxb7 192 Rxb7 193 Rxb7 194 Rxb7 195 Rxb7 196 Rxb7 197 Rxb7 198 Rxb7 199 Rxb7 200 Rxb7 201 Rxb7 202 Rxb7 203 Rxb7 204 Rxb7 205 Rxb7 206 Rxb7 207 Rxb7 208 Rxb7 209 Rxb7 210 Rxb7 211 Rxb7 212 Rxb7 213 Rxb7 214 Rxb7 215 Rxb7 216 Rxb7 217 Rxb7 218 Rxb7 219 Rxb7 220 Rxb7 221 Rxb7 222 Rxb7 223 Rxb7 224 Rxb7 225 Rxb7 226 Rxb7 227 Rxb7 228 Rxb7 229 Rxb7 230 Rxb7 231 Rxb7 232 Rxb7 233 Rxb7 234 Rxb7 235 Rxb7 236 Rxb7 237 Rxb7 238 Rxb7 239 Rxb7 240 Rxb7 241 Rxb7 242 Rxb7 243 Rxb7 244 Rxb7 245 Rxb7 246 Rxb7 247 Rxb7 248 Rxb7 249 Rxb7 250 Rxb7 251 Rxb7 252 Rxb7 253 Rxb7 254 Rxb7 255 Rxb7 256 Rxb7 257 Rxb7 258 Rxb7 259 Rxb7 260 Rxb7 261 Rxb7 262 Rxb7 263 Rxb7 264 Rxb7 265 Rxb7 266 Rxb7 267 Rxb7 268 Rxb7 269 Rxb7 270 Rxb7 271 Rxb7 272 Rxb7 273 Rxb7 274 Rxb7 275 Rxb7 276 Rxb7 277 Rxb7 278 Rxb7 279 Rxb7 280 Rxb7 281 Rxb7 282 Rxb7 283 Rxb7 284 Rxb7 285 Rxb7 286 Rxb7 287 Rxb7 288 Rxb7 289 Rxb7 290 Rxb7 291 Rxb7 292 Rxb7 293 Rxb7 294 Rxb7 295 Rxb7 296 Rxb7 297 Rxb7 298 Rxb7 299 Rxb7 300 Rxb7 301 Rxb7 302 Rxb7 303 Rxb7 304 Rxb7 305 Rxb7 306 Rxb7 307 Rxb7 308 Rxb7 309 Rxb7 310 Rxb7 311 Rxb7 312 Rxb7 313 Rxb7 314 Rxb7 315 Rxb7 316 Rxb7 317 Rxb7 318 Rxb7 319 Rxb7 320 Rxb7 321 Rxb7 322 Rxb7 323 Rxb7 324 Rxb7 325 Rxb7 326 Rxb7 327 Rxb7 328 Rxb7 329 Rxb7 330 Rxb7 331 Rxb7 332 Rxb7 333 Rxb7 334 Rxb7 335 Rxb7 336 Rxb7 337 Rxb7 338 Rxb7 339 Rxb7 340 Rxb7 341 Rxb7 342 Rxb7 343 Rxb7 344 Rxb7 345 Rxb7 346 Rxb7 347 Rxb7 348 Rxb7 349 Rxb7 350 Rxb7 351 Rxb7 352 Rxb7 353 Rxb7 354 Rxb7 355 Rxb7 356 Rxb7 357 Rxb7 358 Rxb7 359 Rxb7 360 Rxb7 361 Rxb7 362 Rxb7 363 Rxb7 364 Rxb7 365 Rxb7 366 Rxb7 367 Rxb7 368 Rxb7 369 Rxb7 370 Rxb7 371 Rxb7 372 Rxb7 373 Rxb7 374 Rxb7 375 Rxb7 376 Rxb7 377 Rxb7 378 Rxb7 379 Rxb7 380 Rxb7 381 Rxb7 382 Rxb7 383 Rxb7 384 Rxb7 385 Rxb7 386 Rxb7 387 Rxb7 388 Rxb7 389 Rxb7 390 Rxb7 391 Rxb7 392 Rxb7 393 Rxb7 394 Rxb7 395 Rxb7 396 Rxb7 397 Rxb7 398 Rxb7 399 Rxb7 400 Rxb7 401 Rxb7 402 Rxb7 403 Rxb7 404 Rxb7 405 Rxb7 406 Rxb7 407 Rxb7 408 Rxb7 409 Rxb7 410 Rxb7 411 Rxb7 412 Rxb7 413 Rxb7 414 Rxb7 415 Rxb7 416 Rxb7 417 Rxb7 418 Rxb7 419 Rxb7 420 Rxb7 421 Rxb7 422 Rxb7 423 Rxb7 424 Rxb7 425 Rxb7 426 Rxb7 427 Rxb7 428 Rxb7 429 Rxb7 430 Rxb7 431 Rxb7 432 Rxb7 433 Rxb7 434 Rxb7 435 Rxb7 436 Rxb7 437 Rxb7 438 Rxb7 439 Rxb7 440 Rxb7 441 Rxb7 442 Rxb7 443 Rxb7 444 Rxb7 445 Rxb7 446 Rxb7 447 Rxb7 448 Rxb7 449 Rxb7 450 Rxb7 451 Rxb7 452 Rxb7 453 Rxb7 454 Rxb7 455 Rxb7 456 Rxb7 457 Rxb7 458 Rxb7 459 Rxb7 460 Rxb7 461 Rxb7 462 Rxb7 463 Rxb7 464 Rxb7 465 Rxb7 466 Rxb7 467 Rxb7 468 Rxb7 469 Rxb7 470 Rxb7 471 Rxb7 472 Rxb7 473 Rxb7 474 Rxb7 475 Rxb7 476 Rxb7 477 Rxb7 478 Rxb7 479 Rxb7 480 Rxb7 481 Rxb7 482 Rxb7 483 Rxb7 484 Rxb7 485 Rxb7 486 Rxb7 487 Rxb7 488 Rxb7 489 Rxb7 490 Rxb7 491 Rxb7 492 Rxb7 493 Rxb7 494 Rxb7 495 Rxb7 496 Rxb7 497 Rxb7 498 Rxb7 499 Rxb7 500 Rxb7 501 Rxb7 502 Rxb7 503 Rxb7 504 Rxb7 505 Rxb7 506 Rxb7 507 Rxb7 508 Rxb7 509 Rxb7 510 Rxb7 511 Rxb7 512 Rxb7 513 Rxb7 514 Rxb7 515 Rxb7 516 Rxb7 517 Rxb7 518 Rxb7 519 Rxb7 520 Rxb7 521 Rxb7 522 Rxb7 523 Rxb7 524 Rxb7 525 Rxb7 526 Rxb7 527 Rxb7 528 Rxb7 529 Rxb7 530 Rxb7 531 Rxb7 532 Rxb7 533 Rxb7 534 Rxb7 535 Rxb7 536 Rxb7 537 Rxb7 538 Rxb7 539 Rxb7 540 Rxb7 541 Rxb7 542 Rxb7 543 Rxb7 544 Rxb7 545 Rxb7 546 Rxb7 547 Rxb7 548 Rxb7 549 Rxb7 550 Rxb7 551 Rxb7 552 Rxb7 553 Rxb7 554 Rxb7 555 Rxb7 556 Rxb7 557 Rxb7 558 Rxb7 559 Rxb7 560 Rxb7 561 Rxb7 562 Rxb7 563 Rxb7 564 Rxb7 565 Rxb7 566 Rxb7 567 Rxb7 568 Rxb7 569 Rxb7 570 Rxb7 571 Rxb7 572 Rxb7 573 Rxb7 574 Rxb7 575 Rxb7 576 Rxb7 577 Rxb7 578 Rxb7 579 Rxb7 580 Rxb7 581 Rxb7 582 Rxb7 583 Rxb7 584 Rxb7 585 Rxb7 586 Rxb7 587 Rxb7 588 Rxb7 589 Rxb7 590 Rxb7 591 Rxb7 592 Rxb7 593 Rxb7 594 Rxb7 595 Rxb7 596 Rxb7 597 Rxb7 598 Rxb7 599 Rxb7 600 Rxb7 601 Rxb7 602 Rxb7 603 Rxb7 604 Rxb7 605 Rxb7 606 Rxb7 607 Rxb7 608 Rxb7 609 Rxb7 610 Rxb7 611 Rxb7 612 Rxb7 613 Rxb7 614 Rxb7 615 Rxb7 616 Rxb7 617 Rxb7 618 Rxb7 619 Rxb7 620 Rxb7 621 Rxb7 622 Rxb7 623 Rxb7 624 Rxb7 625 Rxb7 626 Rxb7 627 Rxb7 628 Rxb7 629 Rxb7 630 Rxb7 631 Rxb7 632 Rxb7 633 Rxb7 634 Rxb7 635 Rxb7 636 Rxb7 637 Rxb7 638 Rxb7 639 Rxb7 640 Rxb7 641 Rxb7 642 Rxb7 643 Rxb7 644 Rxb7 645 Rxb7 646 Rxb7 647 Rxb7 648 Rxb7 649 Rxb7 650 Rxb7 651 Rxb7 652 Rxb7 653 Rxb7 654 Rxb7 655 Rxb7 656 Rxb7 657 Rxb7 658 Rxb7 659 Rxb7 660 Rxb7 661 Rxb7 662 Rxb7 663 Rxb7 664 Rxb7 665 Rxb7 666 Rxb7 667 Rxb7 668 Rxb7 669 Rxb7 670 Rxb7 671 Rxb7 672 Rxb7 673 Rxb7 674 Rxb7 675 Rxb7 676 Rxb7 677 Rxb7 678 Rxb7 679 Rxb7 680 Rxb7 681 Rxb7 682 Rxb7 683 Rxb7 684 Rxb7 685 Rxb7 686 Rxb7 687 Rxb7 688 Rxb7 689 Rxb7 690 Rxb7 691 Rxb7 692 Rxb7 693 Rxb7 694 Rxb7 695 Rxb7 696 Rxb7 697 Rxb7 698 Rxb7 699 Rxb7 700 Rxb7 701 Rxb7 702 Rxb7 703 Rxb7 704 Rxb7 705 Rxb7 706 Rxb7 707 Rxb7 708 Rxb7 709 Rxb7 710 Rxb7 711 Rxb7 712 Rxb7 713 Rxb7 714 Rxb7 715 Rxb7 716 Rxb7 717 Rxb7 718 Rxb7 719 Rxb7 720 Rxb7 721 Rxb7 722 Rxb7 723 Rxb7 724 Rxb7 725 Rxb7 726 Rxb7 727 Rxb7 728 Rxb7 729 Rxb7 730 Rxb7 731 Rxb7 732 Rxb7 733 Rxb7 734 Rxb7 735 Rxb7 736 Rxb7 737 Rxb7 738 Rxb7 739 Rxb7 740 Rxb7 741 Rxb7 742 Rxb7 743 Rxb7 744 Rxb7 745 Rxb7 746 Rxb7 747 Rxb7 748 Rxb7 749 Rxb7 750 Rxb7 751 Rxb7 752 Rxb7 753 Rxb7 754 Rxb7 755 Rxb7 756 Rxb7 757 Rxb7 758 Rxb7 759 Rxb7 760 Rxb7 761 Rxb7 762 Rxb7 763 Rxb7 764 Rxb7 765 Rxb7 766 Rxb7 767 Rxb7 768 Rxb7 769 Rxb7 770 Rxb7 771 Rxb7 772 Rxb7 773 Rxb7 774 Rxb7 775 Rxb7 776 Rxb7 777 Rxb7 778 Rxb7 779 Rxb7 780 Rxb7 781 Rxb7 782 Rxb7 783 Rxb7 784 Rxb7 785 Rxb7 786 Rxb7 787 Rxb7 788 Rxb7 789 Rxb7 790 Rxb7 791 Rxb7 792 Rxb7 793 Rxb7 794 Rxb7 795 Rxb7 796 Rxb7 797 Rxb7 798 Rxb7 799 Rxb7 800 Rxb7 801 Rxb7 802 Rxb7 803 Rxb7 804 Rxb7 805 Rxb7 806 Rxb7 807 Rxb7 808 Rxb7 809 Rxb7 810 Rxb7 811 Rxb7 812 Rxb7 813 Rxb7 814 Rxb7 815 Rxb7 816 Rxb7 817 Rxb7 818 Rxb7 819 Rxb7 820 Rxb7 821 Rxb7 822 Rxb7 823 Rxb7 824 Rxb7 825 Rxb7 826 Rxb7 827 Rxb7 828 Rxb7 829 Rxb7 830 Rxb7 831 Rxb7 832 Rxb7 833 Rxb7 834 Rxb7 835 Rxb7 836 Rxb7 837 Rxb7 838 Rxb7 839 Rxb7 840 Rxb7 841 Rxb7 842 Rxb7 843 Rxb7 844 Rxb7 845 Rxb7 846 Rxb7 847 Rxb7 848 Rxb7 849 Rxb7 850 Rxb7 851 Rxb7 852 Rxb7 853 Rxb7 854 Rxb7 855 Rxb7 856 Rxb7 857 Rxb7 858 Rxb7 859 Rxb7 860 Rxb7 861 Rxb7 862 Rxb7 863 Rxb7 864 Rxb7 865 Rxb7

هيكز امن الاصل

more treatment and radical surgery. But on the way we ignored several bits of important science. "Post-mortems reveal that the brains of transsexuals are the brains of the gender they always believed they were." No further evidence. "It is a very simple diagnosis." No further evidence. "Many children grow up with their gender confusion." No evidence and no quantification — which was worrying, given that one of our subjects was 13-and-a-half.

He had been born she, was called Becky at school, Fred at home but actually wanted to be Rick. He wanted Rick to be short for Richard but had run into parental opposition familiar to adolescents of either sex. His well-intentioned mother wanted Rick to be short for Reuben. "That's going to make my life even harder's going to be." I think he had a point.

● Lynne Truss is on holiday

6.35aaa Think Tank (t) (Teletext) (s) (5189533)

7.00 The Big Breakfast (39533)

9.00 Fifteen to One (t) (Teletext) (s) (919194)

9.30 Schools Out for Adventure (7527115)

9.45 Book Box (6072020) 10.00 Stage Two Science (5957533) 10.15 The French Programme (6851284) 10.35 Irish Writers (7451938) 10.55 Film and Video Showcase (9592937) 11.07 Schools at Work (3672991) 11.15 The Mail (7172571) 11.30 Rat-A-Tat-Tat (2709571) 11.45 First Response (s) (2704206)

12.00 House to House (35718)

12.30pm Sesame Street (41484) 1.30 Melodine (t) (s) (526874) 1.55 Magoo's Masterpiece (17754007)

2.00 FILM: Les Misérables (1952). Vivid version of the Victor Hugo melodrama, starring Michael Rennie as the unjustly imprisoned Valjean and Robert Newton as the fanatical inspector Javert. Directed by Lewis Milestone (Teletext) (1674)

4.00 Backdoor (Teletext) (s) (465) 4.30 Countdown (Teletext) (s) (649) 5.00 Rilly Lake (Teletext) (s) (8511587) 5.45 Terrytoons (125571)

6.00 The Crystal Maze. Edward Tudor-Pole leads a team through four puzzle worlds (t) (Teletext) (s) (35620)

7.00 Channel 4 News (Teletext) (921991)

7.55 The Slot. Viewer's soapbox (264552)

8.00 Brookside. Mike and Lindsey try to make a quiet escape (Teletext) (s) (1587)

8.30 Travelog. The writer and Ukrainian exile Vital Vialov samples the varied delights available on the island of Tasmania, and journalist and political columnist Annie Applebaum investigates the Black Sea port of Odessa (Teletext) (s) (7194)

9.00 Dispatches. A profile of Sir Richard Scott. (Teletext) (538587)

9.45 [REDACTED] Kind and Gentle: A Martin [REDACTED] Short of Curses. (Teletext) (267674)

10.00 ER: Days Like This. A prisoner is admitted after he is bitten by a police dog (Teletext) (s) (9262)

11.00 Friends: The One with the Butt. Sit com about a group of single New Yorkers (t) (Teletext) (s) (300755)

Meat Loaf live in New York (11.25pm)

11.25 Meat Loaf Live in the Neighborhood. The grime-rock singer in concert at the Beacon Theatre, New York (471842)

12.35am Moviewatch. Magazine (s)

7:00-7:15 Kidz
 7:15-7:30 90210
 7:30-7:45 90210
 7:45-8:00 90210
 8:00-8:15 90210
 8:15-8:30 90210
 8:30-8:45 90210
 8:45-9:00 90210
 9:00-9:15 90210
 9:15-9:30 90210
 9:30-9:45 90210
 9:45-10:00 90210
 10:00-10:15 90210
 10:15-10:30 90210
 10:30-10:45 90210
 10:45-11:00 90210
 11:00-11:15 90210
 11:15-11:30 90210
 11:30-11:45 90210
 11:45-12:00 90210
 12:00-12:15 90210
 12:15-12:30 90210
 12:30-12:45 90210
 12:45-1:00 90210
 1:00-1:15 90210
 1:15-1:30 90210
 1:30-1:45 90210
 1:45-2:00 90210
 2:00-2:15 90210
 2:15-2:30 90210
 2:30-2:45 90210
 2:45-3:00 90210
 3:00-3:15 90210
 3:15-3:30 90210
 3:30-3:45 90210
 3:45-4:00 90210
 4:00-4:15 90210
 4:15-4:30 90210
 4:30-4:45 90210
 4:45-5:00 90210
 5:00-5:15 90210
 5:15-5:30 90210
 5:30-5:45 90210
 5:45-6:00 90210
 6:00-6:15 90210
 6:15-6:30 90210
 6:30-6:45 90210
 6:45-7:00 90210
 7:00-7:15 90210
 7:15-7:30 90210
 7:30-7:45 90210
 7:45-8:00 90210
 8:00-8:15 90210
 8:15-8:30 90210
 8:30-8:45 90210
 8:45-9:00 90210
 9:00-9:15 90210
 9:15-9:30 90210
 9:30-9:45 90210
 9:45-10:00 90210
 10:00-10:15 90210
 10:15-10:30 90210
 10:30-10:45 90210
 10:45-11:00 90210
 11:00-11:15 90210
 11:15-11:30 90210
 11:30-11:45 90210
 11:45-12:00 90210
 12:00-12:15 90210
 12:15-12:30 90210
 12:30-12:45 90210
 12:45-1:00 90210
 1:00-1:15 90210
 1:15-1:30 90210
 1:30-1:45 90210
 1:45-2:00 90210
 2:00-2:15 90210
 2:15-2:30 90210
 2:30-2:45 90210
 2:45-3:00 90210
 3:00-3:15 90210
 3:15-3:30 90210
 3:30-3:45 90210
 3:45-4:00 90210
 4:00-4:15 90210
 4:15-4:30 90210
 4:30-4:45 90210
 4:45-5:00 90210
 5:00-5:15 90210
 5:15-5:30 90210
 5:30-5:45 90210
 5:45-6:00 90210
 6:00-6:15 90210
 6:15-6:30 90210
 6:30-6:45 90210
 6:45-7:00 90210
 7:00-7:15 90210
 7:15-7:30 90210
 7:30-7:45 90210
 7:45-8:00 90210
 8:00-8:15 90210
 8:15-8:30 90210
 8:30-8:45 90210
 8:45-9:00 90210
 9:00-9:15 90210
 9:15-9:30 90210
 9:30-9:45 90210
 9:45-10:00 90210
 10:00-10:15 90210
 10:15-10:30 90210
 10:30-10:45 90210
 10:45-11:00 90210
 11:00-11:15 90210
 11:15-11:30 90210
 11:30-11:45 90210
 11:45-12:00 90210
 12:00-12:15 90210
 12:15-12:30 90210
 12:30-12:45 90210
 12:45-1:00 90210
 1:00-1:15 90210
 1:15-1:30 90210
 1:30-1:45 90210
 1:45-2:00 90210
 2:00-2:15 90210
 2:15-2:30 90210
 2:30-2:45 90210
 2:45-3:00 90210
 3:00-3:15 90210
 3:15-3:30 90210
 3:30-3:45 90210
 3:45-4:00 90210
 4:00-4:15 90210
 4:15-4:30 90210
 4:30-4:45 90210
 4:45-5:00 90210
 5:00-5:15 90210
 5:15-5:30 90210
 5:30-5:45 90210
 5:45-6:00 90210
 6:00-6:15 90210
 6:15-6:30 90210
 6:30-6:45 90210
 6:45-7:00 90210
 7:00-7:15 90210
 7:15-7:30 90210
 7:30-7:45 90210
 7:45-8:00 90210
 8:00-8:15 90210
 8:15-8:30 90210
 8:30-8:45 90210
 8:45-9:00 90210
 9:00-9:15 90210
 9:15-9:30 90210
 9:30-9:45 90210
 9:45-10:00 90210
 10:00-10:15 90210
 10:15-10:30 90210
 10:30-10:45 90210
 10:45-11:00 90210
 11:00-11:15

